DEPARTMENT OF INDIA DEPARTMENT OF ARCHAEOLOGY CENTRAL ARCHAEOLOGICAL LIBRARY

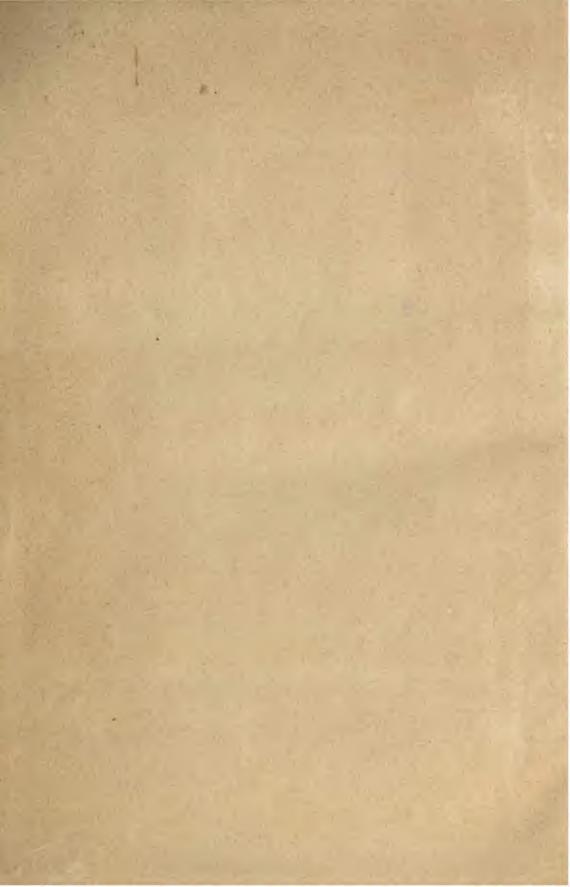

CLASS

CALL No. 891.44109 Kak

D.G.A. 79.

02 del 1/4 22 c / 75/54- 921/1/54 0/ 11/8/54 50 134/613

Laksomi wook Stere, at him Donadowsy. New Dellas

ASPECTS OF EARLY ASSAMESE LITERATURE

PAINTINGS FROM HARIVARA'S LAVA-KUŚAR YUDDHA

REPRODUCTIONS of paintings from Harivara's Lava-Kuśar Yuddha, Assam Research Society MS, Gauhati Collection, obtained from Rāṇī Māhendrī Devī of Āhom rāj family, vide Maheswar Neog: 'Assamese Literature before Sańkaradeva', footnote 47.

- Reconstructed by S. Rai Barua

тор: Miniature on folio 2B depicting return of Rāma home after killing Rāvaņa. From left to right: two soldiers, Sumitrā, Lakşтора, Rāmacandra, Kauśalyā, Bharata, Kaikeyī and Manthara.

воттом: Miniature on folio 6A depicting performance of pumsavana ceremony of Rāma and Sītā. From left to right: a drummer, a piper, three women making propitiatory sound, Janaka tying up ps of Rāma's and Sītā's hair together, the sacred fire, Vasiṣṭha, and Viśvāmitra preparing food for offering.

To face page 38]

ASPECTS OF EARLY ASSAMESE LITERATURE

General Editor

BANIKANTA KAKATI, M.A., PH.D.
Professor of Assamese

1995

891-44109

Kak

1953 GAUHATI UNIVERSITY GAUHATI: ASSAM

LIBRARY, NEW DEI. ...
ALC. No. 1995.
, 25.9.54

G. S. PRESS, MADRAS

FOREWORD

The present work consisting of Essays on different aspects of old Assamese literature is the first research publication of the University of Gauhati, and our thanks are due to the scholars who have collaborated to produce what I believe is a substantial contribution to the study of the subject. The editing of the work was entrusted to Dr. B. K. Kakati, Head of the Department of Assamese, who revised the manuscript before his lamented death in November 1952. Unfortunately he did not live to see the work through the press in its final form.

A comprehensive history of early Assamese literature is still a desideratum. Meanwhile, it is to be hoped that the present work will stimulate research in a subject which has hardly attracted any attention outside the limits of Assam.

JORHAT, 10th December, 1953.

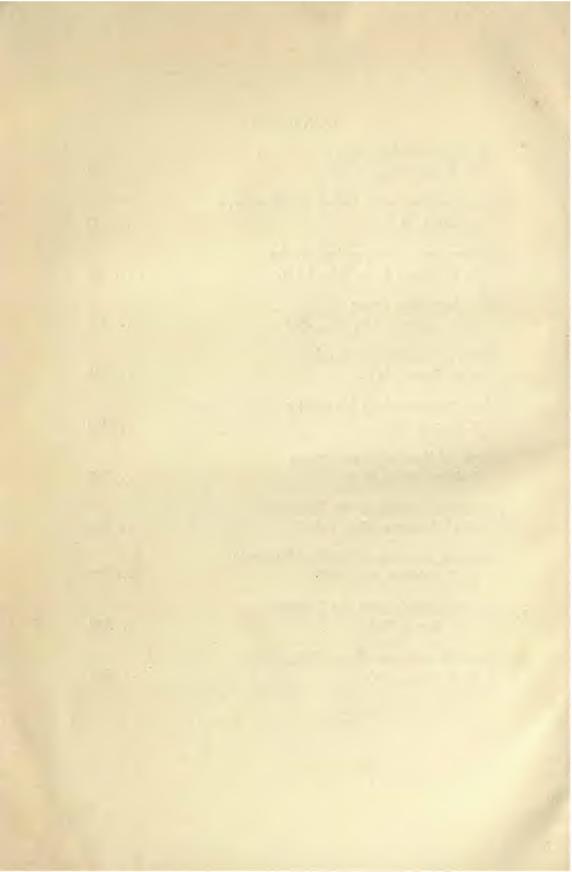

home Book stone O412/-

K. K. HANDIQUI, Vice-Chancellor, Gauhati University.

011/2/2010

CONTENTS

The Assamese language B. Kakati, M.A., Ph.D.		1
B. Kakati, M.A., Fli.D.		1
Assamese literature before Śańkaradeva
M. Neog, M.A.		17
Śańkaradeva: his poetical works
B. K. Barua, M.A., B.L., Ph.D.	* *	65
Early Assamese prose
B. K. Barua, M.A., B.L., Ph.D.		124
Mādhavadeva and his works
T. N. Sarma, M.A.		148
Rāma Sarasvatī and his works
J. Sarma, M.A.		169
Origin of the Assamese drama
Kaliram Medhi, M.A.		189
Assamese versions of the Rāmāyaṇa
U. C. Lekharu, M.A., B.L.	2.5	217
Assamese versions of the Mahābhārata
U. C. Lekharu, M.A., B.L.		228
Assamese versions of the Purāṇas
S. N. Sarma, M.A.		249
Assamese versions of the Gitagovinda
S. N. Sarma, M.A.		307

THE ASSAMESE LANGUAGE*

BY

B. KAKATI

1. Introductory

Assamese is the easternmost New Indo-Aryan language spoken in the Brahmaputra Valley comprising at present six districts with Lakhimpur in the extreme east and Goalpara in the west. It is a language of the plains and is surrounded by speeches belonging to families of which the Tibeto-Burman and the Khāsī are the important ones. Assamese occupies an important place in the group of N.I.A. languages. Hiuen-Tsang the celebrated Chinese traveller visited Kāmarūpa in the 7th century and remained for sometime in the court of King Bhāskaravarman. In course of his references to various aspects of the kingdom of Kamarupa he spoke of its language as "slightly differing" from that of Mid-India. He perhaps meant by it certain peculiarities of the Kamarupī language at the beginning of its evolution. For want of sufficient data we cannot ascertain a definite date of the origin of Assamese as an independent N.I.A. language, though the 10th or 11th century of the Christian era is generally regarded as marking the beginning of the N.I.A, languages. Specimens of Assamese as an independent provincial language have been preserved in the literature from the fourteenth century onwards,

2. Origin of 'Assam'

The word 'Assamese' is an English one based on the anglicised form 'Assam' from the native word "Asam", which in its turn is connected with the Shans who invaded the Brahmaputra Valley in the 13th century. Though the Shan invaders called themselves "Tā i" they came to be referred to as Asam, Asām and Acam by the indigenous people of the province, Early Assamese chronicles used all these variant forms to mean the new Shan invaders. The modern Assamese word Ahom by which the Tāi people are known goes back to early Assamese Asām (Āsām > Asam > Aham > Āhom). The last syllable of Āsām might very well be connected with Sham (Shan, Syam) as Dr. Grierson has suggested but then the initial vowel 'ā' would remain unexplained. Sir Edward Gait suggests Asam (unequalled or peer-less) to be the origin of the present word Āhom, but most probably Asama meaning peerless or unequalled is a latter day Sanskritisation of some earlier form like Āchām. In Ţāi the root cham means "to be defeated". With the privative Assamese affix ā the whole formation Āchām would mean undefeated. The change of Āchām into Āsām is very natural. The presence of forms like Āsām and Ācām in early Assamese lends support to the above view. In a still later period the term Āsām was further Sanskritised by changing it to Āsām.

^{*} For a detailed history of Assamese language, see the writer's Assamese, its Formation and Development,

Thus the word $\bar{A}s\bar{a}m$ was first applied to the Shan invaders and subsequently to the country they conquered, and finally the whole of the Brahmaputra Valley came to be known by this designation. In earliest times the territory now called Asam was known as K\bar{a}mar\bar{u}pa. It should be noted in this connection that while the name of the country still remains $\bar{A}s\bar{a}m$, the name of the tribe to which originally the term was applied undergoes modification and becomes $Ah\bar{a}m$, $Aham$, $\bar{A}hom$. In modern Assamese Shan invaders of the 13th century who subsequently settled in the country are invariably known as $\bar{A}homs$.

3. Evolution of Assamese

Ancient Kāmarūpa, sometimes known as Prāgyotisapura in the epics and Puranas, comprised the whole of north Bengal including Cooch-Behar, and the Rangpur and Jalpaiguri districts of Bengal. When Hiuen-Tsang visited the kingdom of Kāmarūpa (Ka-mo-lu-po), its western boundary was the river Karatoyā in north Bengal. According to Kālikā-purāņa (circa 10th century) and Yogini-tantra (circa 16th century) the western and the eastern boundary of Kāmarūpa were marked by the river Karatoyā (in north Bengal) and Dikkaravāsinī (in eastern Assam) respectively. Thus from the time of Hiuen-Tsang in the 7th century down to the Koch kings of the 17th and 18th centuries the river Karatovā formed the western limit of Kāmarūpa. It was under the patronage of the kings of Kamarupa, and Cooch-Behar. in the fourteenth and sixteenth centuries that the earliest Assamese literature originated and developed. Even now the spoken language of north Bengal and western Assam is subsequently the same and seems to form one dialect group. If territorial readjustments were to be made on the basis of linguistic homogeneity north Bengal should have been included with Assam. Dr. Grierson in his Linquistic Survey of India also notices this affinity of Assamese with the north Bengal dialect. He says, Magadhi was the principal dialect which corresponded to the old Eastern Prakrit. East of Magadha lay the Pracya Apabhramsa, the headquarters of which was at Gauda in the district of Malda. Gauda Apabhramsa also spread to the east keeping north of the Ganges and is there represented at the present day by Northern Bengali and in the valley of Assam by Assamese. North Bengal and Assam did not get their language from Bengal proper but directly from the west. Māgādhī Apabhramsa may be considered as spreading out eastwards and southwards in three directions. To the north-east it developed into Northern Bengali and Assamese, to the south into Oriya and between the two into Bengali. Each of these three is equally directly connected with the common immediate parent, i.e. Pracya Apabhramsa" (L.S.I., Vol. I, part I, pp. 125-126). Dr. S. K. Chatterji also classifies Eastern Apabhramsa into (i) Radha (western Bengal), (ii) Vārendra (north central Bengal), (iii) Vanga (eastern Bengal), (iv) Kāmarūpa (north Bengal and Assam) (O.D.B.L., Vol. I, p. 140).

4. Difference with Bengali

In spite of these authoritative judgments there was and is still in some uniformed quarters an erroneous view that Assamese is a patois of Bengali. Enumeration of a few outstanding and fundamental points of difference will perhaps help to remove such erroneous views.

- (I) Assamese words for fire and water are from the earliest time zui and pānī as opposed to Bengali āgun and zal.
- (II) Assamese and Bengali have contrasting systems of accentuation. Assamese follows the system of penultimate stress and Bengali has an initial stress. For instance in Assamese côtāl (courtyard), the stress falls on the penultimate syllable, while in Bengali cātāl, the stress falls on the first.
- (III) The genitive case affix in Bengali is -er, while in Assamese it is -ar, e.g., Bengali Rāmer (of Rāma), Assamese Rāmar (of Rāma).
- (IV) The locative affix in Assamese is -t- from the earliest times while Bengali has -e-, -te-; e.g. As gharata (in the house), Bg. ghare (in the house).
- (V) The past conditional in Assamese is expressed by the post-position -hēten, after fully conjugated verbal roots in the past. Bengali expresses the past conditional with the present participle base in -it- with personal conjugational affixes, e.g. As. karilohēten (I would have done), Bg. karitām.
- (VI) The infinitive sense in Assamese is formed by -ib-, with its extended form -ibalai and in Bengali by forms in -it-; e.g. As. karibalai, Bg. karite.

- (VII) Assamese has a complete set of negative conjugations with the negative particle -na- placed before the verb root. Bengali has no negative conjugation; e.g. As. nākhāy (does not eat), Bg. khāynā (does not eat).
- (VIII) The plural suffixes in Assamese are entirely different from those of Bengali. The commonly used Assamese plural suffixes are -bor, -bilāk, -hāt. These are entirely absent in Bengali.
- (IX) Assamese pronominal derivatives of time and place, viz. etiya, tetiyā, ketiyā, ka't, ta't, etc. seem to have no parallel formations in Bengali.
- (X) The type of vowel-harmony where an anterior -ā- is shortened under the influence of following -ā- in a succeeding syllable is absent in Bengali; e.g. As. kaţāri (knife); cakā (circle, wheel); Bg. kāţāri, cākā.
- (XI) Assamese devised from earliest times a symbol (a) for w-glide. Bengali has none to denote this glide.

The above are only a few of the important differences, There are many other phonological and morphological differences, too numerous to note here.

5. Assamese specimens of the formative period

Dr. Haraprasad Sastri discovered in Nepal a book of songs and aphorisms written by Tantric Buddhists of Sahajayana doctrine between the 8th and 12th centuries. It has been published under the title Bauddha Gan O Döhā and Bengali scholars consider it to be the specimen of Bengali of one thousand years ago. But on an examination of the grammatical forms of the Döhās, it becomes apparent that its language represents the latest phase of the Magadhan Aphabramsa; as such it preserves to a considerable extent the earliest forms of the eastern N.I.A. languages. Certain phonological and morphological peculiarities registered in the Bauddha Döhās have come down in unbroken continuity to modern Assamese, The shortening of an anterior -a- under the influence of the succeeding-ā- in the next syllable, which is one of the special characteristics of Assamese, is also found in the language of the Dohas. Similarly, the dative case-ending in -lai, locative ending -ta, genitive ending in -ra; present participle in -ant; conjunctive in -i and -ile are some of the Assamese peculiarities inherited from the language of the Döhäs.

Another important work which has been claimed as a purely Bengali work, but which nevertheless preserves the earliest Assamese formations is Kṛṣṇa Kirtana of Baḍu Caṇḍidāsa. Like the Döhās Kṛṣṇa Kīrtana represents the pre-Bengali and pre-Assamese dialect groups which may be disignated as Eastern Māgadhān Apabhramśa. They represented mixtures of many tongues and many forms and hence we find parallel forms characteristic of different N.I.A. languages of Eastern India. In Kṛṣṇa Kīrtana, for instance, the first personal affixes of the present indicative are -i, and -o; the former is found in Bengali at present and the latter in Assamese. Similarly, the negative particle na- assimilated to the initial vowel of the conjugated root, which is characteristic of Assamese, is also found in Kṛṣṇa Kīrtana. Modern Bengali places the negative particle after the conjugated root. With the development of linguistic self-consciousness the parallel forms were isolated and each dialect group became clearly demarcated and different parallel forms became leading characteristics of the dialect groups.

6. Distinctive periods of Assamese language

The history of the Assamese language as preserved in literature may be divided conveniently into three periods:—

(I) Early Assamese: from the fourteenth to the end of the sixteenth century. It covers the pre-Vaisnavite period, i.e. the period before the advent of Sankaradeva and the Vaisnavite period initiated by his literary activities. The earliest Assamese writers, viz. Hema Saraswati and Harivara Vipra who composed Prahlāda Caritra and Babruvāhan-Parva respectively wrote under the patronage of King Durlabhanārāyaṇa of Kamatāpura who ruled towards the end of the 13th or the earlier part of the 14th century. The next two important poets of the same period are Rudra Kandali and Kaviratna Saraswati who composed Drona-Parva and Jayadratha-vadha. But the towering poet of this period is Mādhava Kandali who is respectfully referred to by Sankaradeva (b. 1449) as his flawless predecessor. Mādhava Kandali flourished towards the end of the fourteenth century and translated the entire Rāmāyaṇa under the patronage of Mahāmāṇikya, V the then Kachari king of central Assam.

In all these writers the Assamese idioms and expressions seem to have been fully individualised. The personal affixation to nouns of relationship is fully established and so is the anterior -ā- shortened under the influence of the succeeding -ā-. The addition of personal ending after participal tenses in -ib- and -it- was not fully established. A good deal of fluctuation is noticeable—the participal suffixes sometimes standing alone without any personal endings and sometimes taking them on. There is in all these writers a curious use of the conjunctive participle, e.g. hāni-ere (does pierce) kari-era (do you do). The past participle in -ib- is also found in all these writers, e.g. maribāra prajā (the slain people), dibāra astra (weapons given).

The literature gained a great momentum at the hands of Sankaradeva who brought a Vaisnavite revival by preaching as well as by his writings. The archaism noticeable in the pre-Vaisnavite writers is entirely absent in his writings and the curious use of pleonastic conjunctives wholly disappear. Sankaradeva also for the first time introduced Brajabuli idioms and affixes in his dramas and songs, later on practised by his followers also. This same period also witnesses the use of prose as the vehicle of religious propaganda. Bhattadeva translated the entire Bhagavadgitā and Bhāgavata Purāna into Assamese prose towards the close of the sixteenth century. His prose was an artificial one, yet it preserves certain grammatical peculiarities. The first personal ending -m in the future tense appears for the first time in writing side by side with the conventional -bo. The extended forms of personal endings of participal tenses like -o-ho, -lo-ho, -a-ha, -la-ha, -li-hi, -bi-hi, are not used at all. These are mainly used for the exigencies of metre.

- (II) The Middle Assamese period covers a period from the beginning of the seventeenth century to the beginning of the 19th century, e.g. up to the conquest of Assam by the British. The special feature of this period from the point of view of language is the historical writings initiated under the inspiration of the Ahom court. These historical writings in prose, better known as Burañjis, broke away from the style of religious writings. The language of these chronicles is essentially modern with alteration in grammar and orthography. The plural suffixes of nouns -bor, and -hāt, appear for the first time in these compositions. The pleonastic use of the conjunctive participles, e.g. -gai (dharile-gai, thākile-gai, etc.) and -hi (pālehi, barilhi, etc.) is well established. The transfer of plural suffixes from nouns to verbs, e.g. -hak, -hok, -har, etc. is first noticed here.
- (III) The Modern Assamese period begins with the publication of the Bible in Assamese by the American Baptist Missionaries in the first quarter of the 19th century. In 1846 they started a monthly periodical called Aranodaya. In 1846 the first Assamese grammar written by N. Brown, a missionary, was published; and in 1867 Rev. M. Bronson brought out for the first time an Assamese-English dictionary. Under the influence of the missionaries, a set of native writers grew up and books and periodicals in the language of eastern Assam were multiplied. Thus the tradition of the Ahom court supported by the missionaries, established the language of eastern Assam as the literary speech of the entire province.

Owing to the levelling influence of the Ahom court, the language of eastern Assam shews very little dialectical variations. But there is a good deal of local variations in the spoken language of western Assam spoken in different parts of the Kamrup and Goalpara districts of which five local variations are to be found in the Kamrup district alone. The reason for this is not far to seek. A steady central influence that gives homogeneity to manners as to speech was never built up by any ruling power in western Assam.

7. Assamese Vocabulary

Assamese vocabulary may conveniently be classified under six divisions:

- (1) Words of original Sanskrit or Indo-Aryan origin coming through a process of linguistic evolution through the Prakrit and Apabhramsa stages. These are generally known as tadbhava words.
- (2) Words common to many N. I. A. languages but not traceable to Indo-Aryan source. These are termed as deśya words.
- (3) Words borrowed at one time or another from other N. I. A. languages.
 - (4) Words of non-Aryan origin.
 - (5) A certain number of English and other European words.
- (6) Sanskrit words either in original or in modified forms to suit the genius or the phonological peculiarities of Assamese. These two classes of words are designated as tatsama and ardhatatsama words by N. I. A. grammarians. Let us discuss these sources a bit elaborately.
- (1) Of the six groups of words, those that come under the first heading constitute the preponderating element. Most of the words used in everyday life belong to this class. This is mostly due to the fact that the foundation of Assamese literature was laid by Vaispavite reformers whose chief aim was to appeal to the masses and who composed their books as much as possible in the language of the people. In the modern period also the American Baptist Mission began to publish Assamese books in the beginning of the 19th century in a homely diction using tadbhava words in abundance. The tatsama or the original Sanskrit words are sparingly used in the spoken dialect; it is generally used in a limited scale in poetry and other forms of creative literature. Side by side with the above two types of words having their source in Sanskrit there is a fair amount of ardhatatsama words. These seem to be later formations and often betray a good deal of semantic variations. A few words having different forms with different meanings are noted below.

Ardhatatsama (Semi-tatsama) Tadbhaya Tatsama xah (agricultural crops) śasya xāh (kernel) xaic (paddy) thorā (pestle of troti husking) thot (beak of a bird) gar (boil) gar (rhino) ganda sañca xac (impression) xão (seed for germination).

Thus the semi-tatsamas are modified loan words from Sanskrit and are formed either according to the genius of the spoken language or under the influence of dialectal cross-currents.

- (2) There is a fair representation in Assamese of what has been registered as deśya elements in N. I. A. lexicons. Such words as tēteli (tamarind), kadali (plantain), tāmola (arecanut), dimā (egg) are not Indo-Aryan words but nevertheless derived from Sanskrit. These words were taken into the Sanskrit fold before the N.I.A. languages came into existence.
- (3) The chief source for these has been Hindusthani. From that source has been received also a large number of Persian and Arabic words. Most of the words relating to law, order and revenue and names of certain articles of luxury are of Persian and Arabic origin. Words of Sanskrit origin which preserve the sibilant sound in place of the Sanskrit sibilants which uniformly have an x sound in Assamese, are loan words from Hindusthani or other western dialects. To denote such sibilant sounds c is used in Assamese spelling. Homely Assamese words often with slight alteration of meaning shew parallel equivalents in Oriva. Bihārī, Hindusthānī and other western languages. These might have descended from common sources and in some cases might also have been due to migration and inter-provincial contacts. Certain Assamese words have parallel formations in westernmost languages like Mārāthī, which the Northern Indian languages do not seem to possess. A few are noted below by way of illustration:

As.

beji (needle)
barangaṇi (subscription) tāngaraṇ (edition) jakarā (bhāt) (surplus boiled rice kept for the next meal) khābhani (a scraper)

Mārāthī

bej (eye of a needle) bargaṇi (subscription) tangaraṇ (improvement) jakerā (surplus article) khavani (a scraper).

About this class of words it would be more plausible to assume race contact rather than derivation from a common source.

(4) The principal non-Aryan sources contributing loan words to Assamese may be classified under the following heads. (i) Austro-Asiatic, (ii) Tibeto-Burman, (iii) Thai.

I. Austro-Asiatic influence

The Austro-Asiatic influence may be traced to three language groups: (a) Khāsi, (b) Kolarian, (c) Mālayan. While the Khāsi elements may be regarded as loans due to the contact of the Assamese with the Khasis, the Malayan and the Kolarian elements may be said to be due to the facts of a sub-stratum resulting from the unconscious blending of two systems existing amongst the people. The Austro-Asiatic people are supposed by some to have been the earliest inhabitants of northern India and driven to their present mountain homes by the Tibeto-Burman on the east and by the Dravidian on the west. The Khāsi language in Assam is the sole representative of the Austro-Asiatic family in north-eastern India. The other representative of the Austro-Asiatic stock are the Munda (Kolarian) languages that occupy the eastern half of Central India. Most of these people who once spoke these Austric dialects have now merged into the Hindu and Muhammedan masses of northern India and have become transformed into the presentday Aryan speaking castes and groups of the country. The absorption of the Austric speaker into the Aryan fold explains the presence in the Indo-Aryan speeches of a considerable number of Austric words. It should be borne in mind that the similarities of Assamese elements with the Austro-Asiatic speeches noted in Assamese, its Formation and Development (pp. 33-47) are based on merely sound and meaning, which is not a sure guide in etymology. The influence of the Khāsi language seems to be confined mostly to the vocabulary. A few selected words having similarity with Khāsi are noted below.

(a) Khāsī correspondences

As.

kābau (supplication)

kingkhāp (a kind of silk) khāmoc (grasp)

kamā (wander about aimlessly)

jañjāl (trouble)

methon (a wild bull)

cokorā (shell, scab)

sañjat (trust, confidence) bhur (a raft) bhurā (a male wild boar)

Khāsi. kabo (to request) kem-khap (a kind of cloth) kham (to close fist) kma (wander, roam) jinjar (trouble) mythen, mythun (big and mascular as calf) soh-khroh (having pock marks) symjat (a pledge) bur (a raft) bhur (one of the herd of wild boars).

A few words retained in Khāsi seems to have been absorbed into Sanskrit also, e.g. Skt. cholanga = a lemon, As. soleng, Khāsī soh-long; Skt. simba = pod, Khāsi symbāi = a seed; etc.

(b) Kŏlārian correspondences

The present habitation of Kolārian people in Central Provinces precludes any possibility of its influence upon Assamese. But according to the references in Vāyu Purāņa and Mahābhārata the Kols originally inhabited eastern India. If it is a fact then the Kōlarian influence becomes easily conceivable. Both the Kolārian dictionaries (the Santālī and Muṇḍārī) contain scores of words that bear striking similarities to Assamese formations of unknown origin. A few Assamese words bearing similarities to Santālī and Muṇḍārī words are noted below.

(1) Mundārī correspondences

As, atôm-tôkāri (frugal, economical)

việe (float)

vbilā (to distribute) danguwā (bachelor) erā (yes) jūţi (snare) lāṭum (a spinning top) mugā (silk cocoon) uburiyā (to turn upside down) utangowā (to goad) cikarā (a skin louse) lekhiyā (like, similar) ātom (brink) + tak (to be full) atu (to float)

\sqrt{bil} (to spread) danguwā (solitary)
elā (expressing assent)

\sqrt{juti} (to seduce)

\sqrt{lātum} (to fold up) mungā (coral)

\sqrt{obor} (lie down on the belly) otāngāo (be carried away by wind)
siku (louse)
lekā, lekhā (like)

Mnd.

(2) Santālī correspondences ākor-gojā (obstinate) aṭhkuriyā (childless, barren) bhut-kurā (dwarfish) caphal (having health and vigour) dobolā (a piece of land). dhip (a boundary mark, a hillock) dhumā (big) dāk (to expel) gohāri (petition for help)

pāhār (a hill).

akor (difficult) atkura (childless) bhutka (staunted) caphel (smooth) doblak dhipi, dhiph (a mark of boundaries) dhuma (big, fat) danka (to outcast)
guhar (shout for help)
Austr. pāu+Sant. hara (a hill).

(c) Malayan elements

In addition to the observations made under the two previous sections (Khāsi and Kolarian), it may be stated that Austric elements seem to constitute an essential substratum of Assamese vocabulary. The vocables that are regarded as indigenous at present, seem to have been mostly taken over from the Austric speakers. The slang words denoting sex life and sex organs, the terms of relationship according to varied grades of life, the names of various descriptions of animals, seem to go back to Austric sources. The influence or the connection of the Austro-Asiatic languages over Sanskrit and N. I. A. languages has been discussed in detail by Przyluski, Levi, Bloch, S. K. Chatterji and other eminent scholars. The following Assamese words having similarity with words of Austric speeches of the Malay Peninsula deserve notice. The list should not be considered as an exhaustive one.

As.

Austric words of Malay Peninsula

ātā (grandfather) akaņ, akaņi (term addressed to young) āmai (mothers' equal) āi (mother) beţī (girl)
bāi (elder sister) bilāk (many) bēt (mouth) celāuri (eye-brow) da'l (temple) gorā (heel)
hepā, hāpā (wild cat)

amai (mother, aunt) ai (parent) betina (girl, woman) bhai, ibhai (elder sister) ba-lu, ba-lut (many) beto (face) chelau (to see) dol (house)
gor (lower part of leg) hampet (flying fox)

ata, atar (grandfather)

awa kanit (young child)

As.

Austric words of Malay Peninsula

ja (crest of a cock) kerketuwā (squirrel) kām, kāyem (a kind of bird) latā-mākari (a leopard) lāo-pānī (liqour) mēcā (curved, bent) maidām (a burial mound)
solā (toothless) ṭelekā (having prominent eyes) ṭākon (a bamboo stick) siju (a kind of plant having thorns)

juo, zoa (cock's crest) ker, kekah, tăbā (squirrel) ka-ayam (fowl) lataik (wild cat)
lau (clean water) menchas (bent) midap, maidap (a hillock) sola (bald)
telek (see)

sola (bald)
telek (see) tokn (hand) siajoi (a kind of siajoi (a kind of plant).

These and many other words bearing striking similarity with Austric words are to be found in slightly modified forms in other N.I.A. languages also. Some of these have Sanskrit counterparts also. For instance āmai (mother's equal) may be a variation of the Sanskrit word ambā (mother).

(II) Tibeto-Burman (Bodo) element

The Bodos built up a strong kingdom and with varying fortunes and under various tribal names (the Chutiyās, the Kachāris, the Koches) held sway over different parts of north-eastern India during different historical periods. The Bodos live in daily contact with the Aryanized people. It is natural to expect that they should make some contribution to the vocables of the people with whom they have been living in close contact. There are many Assamese words which bear striking resemblance to Bodo words, but it is difficult to ascertain whether those words are borrowed from the Bodos or the latter borrowed them from the Aryan speeches. Nevertheless the correspondences deserve notice. A few selected words are noted below.

As. Bodo.

ā-gac (to hinder, obstruct) gaso (hinder) gorā (to season by keeping under goro (hatch) water)

hāphalu (a mound) cerengā (streaks of light) jon (pointed) hojā (simpleton)

hengār (fencing to obstruct) hāo-phāo (lungs)

laphā (a vegetable plant) śilikhā (myrobalam) ha-phlau (ant-hill) srān (light) jon (a spear) hojāi henrā (to obstruct) hām (breath), fai (to come) laiphana (a plant)

laiphang (a plant)

(III) Thai (Ahom) element

The Ahoms ruled over Assam for nearly six hundred years. But in spite of that the Ahom language leaves very little impression upon Assamese. The Ahoms gave up their language and adopted Assamese as the language of everyday life as well as of State business. As a result only a few Ahom words are found to be in use in Assamesse.

As.

burañjī (history)
khilañjī (tradition) run-ghar (a palace) kāren (a palace)
cen (hair) māihāng (a plate having a stand) bān (a cup having a stand) bān (a cup having a stand) jengā (uneasy situation) Ahom.

buranji (chronicle) khilanji (tradition) ran (a palace) kāran (palace) can (hair)

māihang (a kind of dish)

ban (a kind of cup) jen (feel uneasy).

In the previous sections, lexical correspondences between Assamese and non-Aryan languages have been noted. In the following section other non-Aryan influences that have shaped or coloured Assamese are briefly discussed.

8. Non-Aryan traces in place-names

(a) Austric place-names

The names of places having kām as the first syllable and ta, ti, etc. as the last syllable are suspected to be of Austric origin. Kāmākhyā, Kāmarūpa, Kamatā, Camatā, Bakatā, Dipotā may be cited by way of illustration. In the Austric speeches, formations like kom, kam, are seen invariably to be used in connection with ideas denoting necromancy. The places mentioned above are famous for Tantric practices. Again Austric equivalents for earth, land, place are ta, te, teh, tik, tyek, etc. Names of places having these formations, therefore naturally lead one to suspect their Austric origin.

Austric equivalents for water are ho, hong, ong, taya, tiu, tu, du, diu, lao. The word indicating water is placed before or after other words. Lohita, popularly called Luit, the alternative name of the river Brahmaputra is obviously a Sanskritized formation of such forms as Lao-tu. Other river names in Assam are Tihu, Tipām, Tiyak, Dihong, Dibong, Dichāng, etc. Their very formations clearly betray their Austric origin.

(b) Bodo place-names

Hājo, (Bodo Hājo, a hill), Hākāmā, a village in Goalpara (Bd. hākāmā, to conceal), Bihāmpur, a village in Kamrup (Bd. bihām, a daughter-in-law), Dispur, a village near Gauhati (Bd. disai, to remove to another place) are some of the place-names which are suspected to be of Bodo origin.

The Bodos rechristened the river names of other origins by placing their own equivalents for water before it; e.g. Di-hong, where Bodo di was placed before an Austric hong (water). Similarly Dihong, Digaru, Dibru, Dikrang, Disang are some of the rivernames of Bodo origin.

(c) Ahom place-names

The place-names of Tāi origin are also connected with the term for water. The Āhom equivalent for water is nām, and it occurs as the first syllable of many place and river-names, e.g. Nāmti (name of a river, and a place near it), Nāmrūp (the name of a river and a place), Nāmdānd (the name of a river).

9. Assamese sounds and letters

Assamese does not possess as many sounds as there are letters in use. The letters of the Sanskrit alphabet are used in writing Assamese but their articulations are often different. The palatals c, ch, etc. are pronounced as dentals and so also the cerebrals t, d, etc. The Sanskrit sibilants have lost their sibilant values in Assamese. In initial positions the Skt. sibilants are articulated as Greek x and in non-initial positions they are treated as h. A sibilant sound in Assamese is denoted by the palatal c.

So far as the vowels are concerned there is no distinction of length in sounds of i, $\bar{\imath}$, u, \bar{u} . Their distinction is kept only in writing. Sounds like r, l are never present in Assamese.

10. Stress in Assamese

There are two different systems of stress sharply differentiated from one another in two different dialectal areas. The stress in the Kāmrūpī dialects in western Assam is dominantly initial, whereas the stress in the standard colloquial seems to fall in a line with the prevailing pan-Indian system in being placed on the penultimate syllable. The dominant initial stress of the Kāmrūpī dialects causes such violent changes in the following syllable as to make words almost unrecognizable. Each particular word carries its own initial stress and when the final syllable is an open one the medial vowels are slurred over, so that medial syllables are always the weakest in a Kāmrūpī dialect.

11. Probable extent of non-Aryan influences Structurally and by origin Assamese is an Indo-Aryan language coming through a process of gradual evolution from O.I.A.

stage. Therefore, phonologically, morphologically, and glossarially Assamese can be traced back through M.I.A. to the O.I.A. period. But being surrounded on all sides by non-Aryan speeches, Assamese has been coloured, though not deeply, but nevertheless not insignificantly, by them. The non-Aryan contribution to Assamese vocabulary has been discussed. But a few more probable influences on phonological and morphological aspects have been noted below.

(a) Phonological

- (i) The cerebrals and dentals though differentiated in spelling have both acquired values as alveolars. The loss of distinction and the establishment of alveolar pronunciation has been attributed by Dr. Grierson to Tibeto-Burman influence.
- (ii) The same influence has been postulated in fronting O.I.A. palatals to dental in Assamese by Dr. S. K. Chatterji.
- (iii) Words having no nasal elements in O.I.A. stage develop nasalization in N.I.A. languages. This is called spontaneous nasalization. In Assamese there are many cases of such spontaneous nasalization. Dr. Grierson explains this phenomenon as of non-Aryan origin.
- (iv) A certain amount of non-Aryan influence is suspected in matters of aspiration of O.I.A. initial and medial stops. So far as Assamese and the eastern dialects of Bengali are concerned the influence of Bodo in aspirating initial stops is unmistakable. "In the languages of the Bodo group, the great stress that is laid on a consonant when it is at the commencement of a syllable often gives unvoiced stops an aspirated sound" (L.S.I., Vol. III, p. 11).

(b) Morphological

- (i) Reduplication of a word to produce a jingle is considered to be an extra-Aryan phenomenon. The whole root or its first elements can be doubled and in this way the meaning is intensified. This has been the notable characteristic of Kolarian, Dravidian and of the Khāsi language. In Assamese also this phenomenon could be noticed.
- (ii) The origin of enclitic definitives is also extra-Aryan. The enclitics are post-positional affixes and are added to nouns or numerals to define the nature of the object or the article referred to. In Tibeto-Burman languages generic prefixes are commonly used with numerals which follow the nouns. They are many and various according as they qualify "flat" or "globular" things, things standing as trees, persons, animals, parts of body, etc. In the Austric languages the co-efficient follows the numeral and in the Tibeto-Burman the co-efficient is prefixed to the numeral. In Assamese the infinitive is annexed and not prefixed.

- (iii) Extra-Aryan influence seems to be responsible for the use of personal affixes to nouns of relationship. In this respect Assamese seems to stand out alone amongst all N. I. A. languages. Words of relationship take on different personal affixes according to the relationship indicated with the first, the second or the third person. In case of the second person, separate affixes are used to denote honorified or non-honorified relations. This peculiarity of affixing personal affixes is also the characteristic of the Tibeto-Burman and the Austric speeches. In case of the former the personal infinitive is prefixed, but in case of the latter it is suffixed. In Assamese personal affixes are suffixed. Austric influence in this respect seems more probable.
- (iv) The use of different words to express distinct aspects of relationship according to the age of the person with whom relationship is conveyed is another characteristic of Assamese which deserves special notice. In Assamese of the two words used to denote a senior or a junior, one is invariably an Aryan word and the other is of non-Aryan origin. Thus kakāi (elder brother) is probably a non-Aryan word while bhāi (younger brother) is an Aryan word. This characteristic is also probably derived from the Austric.
- (v) Non-Aryan origin is suspected of the plural suffixes bilāk, gilā, nglā, lā, etc. Similar forms denoting plural are to be found in Austric speeches.
- (vi) Amongst the eastern languages, Assamese stands isolated in prefixing the negative particle as an integral part of the conjugated verb-root. Amongst the Tibeto-Burman languages of Assam, there is a twofold use of the negative. In some cases the negative precedes the verb while in others the negative follows the root. In the Bodo language which has influenced Assamese to a certain extent, though the negative generally follows the root it qualifies, the imperative negative precedes the root. This phenomenon of the negative imperative naturally leads one to suspect its influence upon Assamese also.
- (vii) The Bodo affixes ma, sa which indicate something big and small respectively, with their extended forms exist as derivatives in many Assamese words; -ma has its extensions in -m, -mā and -sa in -cā, -ciyā.

ASSAMESE LITERATURE BEFORE SANKARADEVA

BY

M. NEOG

INTRODUCTION

An account of Assamese literature of the period anterior to Sankaradeva is of singular interest to students from the fact that during later ages almost the entire field was covered by Vaisnavism and its ramifications. Even in the matter of this period itself one can, not unreasonably, suspect Vaisnava influence by way of interpolations and revisions on the Vaisnavite line.

It is remarkable that in these predecessors of Sankaradeva the language had already developed, with full-fledged payāra and tripadī versifications, into a perfect and powerful medium of literary expression. This is a somewhat strange phenomenon as no work of the formative period of the Assamese language and literature just preceding is available.

The literature of the period under review is best studied in two broad divisions: first, translations and adaptations; and secondly, choral songs known as ojā-pāli. They form two distinct groups so far as literary forms are concerned. In the matter of time also they can be demarcated from one another. In the latter division we group together the poets Mankara, Durgāvara and Pītāmbara. Of these three, while Mankara's time cannot definitely be fixed, Durgavara and Pitambara are contemporaries, possibly senior ones, of Sankaradeva. They are considered in this account of pre-Sankaradeva literature because they are free from the far-reaching influences of neo-Vaisnavism that had spread in Assam from the latter part of the fifteenth century and their poetry is more secular than religious in tone. The poets in the first division belong to a period of history of which we have no reliable account. On the other hand for the construction of the political history of the period we have greatly, almost absolutely, to rely on evidences that are afforded by literary works. We find in these the mention of king Durlabhanārāyana otherwise much spoken of in legendary accounts, of his son Indranārāyana, of Tāmradhvaja who has also been considered to be a son of Durlabhanārāyana, and of "Varāharājā" Śrī-mahā-māṇikya, the seat of whose capital still remains unascertained. There are no literary accounts of these monarchs in the form of chronicles as of kings of later times or evidence of copper-plate grants as of earlier Kāmarūpa kings (4th-12th century A.D.).

Durlabhanārāyaņa seems to be the earliest of the kings mentioned in the literature of the age and is considered to have belonged to the latter part of the thirteenth or the middle of the fourteenth century. Indranārāyaņa and Tāmradhvaja in that case were men of the early part or latter part of the fourteenth century. The extent of their kingdom Kamatā or Kamatā-mandala remains to be conjectured. The village in which Kaviratna Sarasvati's father lived in Durlabhanārāyaṇa's time is Choṭaśilā, possibly the same as the Silā village in the present Barpetā subdivision. Harivara Vipra says that Durlabhanārāyaṇa became king at Kāmapura. This is possibly a reference to the capital which was Kāmapura, Kāmatāpura or Kamatāpura situated near modern Cooch Behār. Kālirām Medhi supposes that the kingdom of Kamatā-mandala in those days consisted of the present districts of Rangpur, Cooch Behär, Goalpara and Kamrup. Nothing is known of the nature of the rule or other activities of these Kamatā kings.

Śri-mahā-māṇikya, the "Varāha-rāja" is probably a Kachārī king of the fourteenth century and may be the same as Mahāmāṇi-phā of Kachārī chronicles, who established his capital at Pāţ-hedamba (Cāchār).1 About the extent of the Kachārī kingdom at this time Gait remarks: "In the thirteenth century it would seem that the Kachāri kingdom extended along the south bank of the Brahmaputra, from the Dikhu to the Kallang, or beyond, and included also the valley of the Dhansiri and the tract which now forms the North Cachar subdivision. At that time, the country further west, though largely inhabited by Kachāris, appears to have formed part of the Hindu kingdom of Kamata. Towards the end of this century, it is narrated that the outlying Kachāri settlements east of the Dikhu river withdrew before the advance of the Ahoms. For a hundred years this river appears to have formed the boundary between the two nations, and no hostilities between them are recorded until 1490, when a battle was fought on its banks."2 Cukāphā led a large body of nine thousand Shāns from Maulung, somewhere in the ancient Shan kingdom of Pong, across the Pātkāi hills and in 1228 A.D., arrived in Khāmjāng and laid the foundation of the Ahom kingdom in Assam. It was only by the end of the fourteenth century that the first stage in the growth of Brahmanical influence amongst the Ahoms was marked at the accession of Cudangpha to the throne (1397 A.D.). It took a little time more for them to identify themselves culturally with the different peoples of the country and cement all of them into one nation. They brought with them a historic sense and kept records of all their important activities from the beginning, but this was done, at least during the period under review, in their tribal language. Apart from this no prose work of this age is available and possibly prose literature was then not born at all.

Kachārī Buranji, ed. by S. K. Bhuyan, D. H. A. S., 1936, p. 10.
 A History of Assam, 1926, pp. 250-51.

While the Ahoms rose into power in the east, another political power was growing rapidly and making itself felt in the western part of the land. The Hindu kings of Kamata held doubtful sway over Kāmarūpa, it would seem, only for short periods of time: and quite a swarm of petty local chiefs called Bhūyas, would often raise their heads and occupy vast tracts of the country. When the Kamatā kings had finally vanished away and a number of Bhūyās were ruling in different parts of the land without any of them attempting at their unification, an adventurous young man of the Koc tribe, Viśu (later Viśvasimha) by name, swept like a hurricane over these chiefs and succeeded in establishing a new and powerful kingdom in Kāmarūpa in the early years of the sixteenth century. It was possibly under the shade of his patronage that Durgāvara wrote his poetry. Viśvasimha's son Naranārāyana extended the boundaries of the kingdom to a great extent and a learned man himself, he converted his court to a meeting place of poets and scholars.

We have it on the authority of Hiuen Tsiang that king Bhaskarayarman of Kamarupa of the seventh century A.D. was a lover of learning and that his subjects emulated his craving for knowledge. The Kamarupa court was visited by scholars of various schools of learning from abroad and they were kindly received by the king and his people alike, as in the case of this Chinese pilgrim. The copper-plate grants of the Hindu kings of the country evidence the culture of Vedic learning, of Smrti, astrology, Tantras, and music. The only extant literary work however of the age ending in the fourteenth century A.D. is Kālikā Purāna, a work of about 1100 A.D. unless we consider some of the Caryapadas also as being written in this land of mysticism.

Sankaradeva, whose literary activities fast followed upon this period, was kept at a village school, tol or chātra-śāl by his grandmother for a period of five years. This school was maintained by a Brāhmaṇa ojā or teacher named Mahendra Kandali, where not only Brāhmaṇa pupils but sons of rich and ruling families like the Bhūyās acquired their learning. They studied there Sanskrit grammar and lexicography, the Vedas, the Smṛtis, the Mahābhārata, the Rāmāyaṇa, the Purāṇas and the Kāvyas. Scriptural discourses were held in the courts of kings and in the assembly of scholars, where one scholar or one school of thought came to bid for superiority over another school of thought.

The habit of encouraging education and learning became traditional with the Kāmarūpa monarchs and the country continued to have its centres of learning, big or small. Kings like Durlabhanārayaṇa, Indranārāyaṇa, Tāmradhvaja, Śrī-mahāmāṇikya, Viśvasimha and Naranārāyaṇa (with his brother Śūkladhvaja or Cilārāya) extended their patronage to poets and learned men. This kind of patronage became the main impulse behind the rendering of Sanskrit works into Assamese so as to bring their sweetness and secret within easy reach of the common people or composing songs for choric singing as at the time of worship of the serpent deity Manasā.

A great impetus was thus given to learning in general by the patronage and encouragement of the royal court, discussion in scholastic societies, and village schools maintained by local teachers. There was also, it seems, a thirst among the common people, halfeducated and uneducated, to know what beautiful things lay hidden in the śāstras, especially the story elements in them. An impulse had almost an organic growth for the creation of a vernacular literature, which, besides its noble virtues of edification, had inspiring tales of great heroes and religious men and women to tell. The entire Rāmāyana had to be rendered into Assamese verse; and episodes, especially of a heroic or romantic nature, from the Mahabhārata, Harivamsa and the Purānas had to be retold in the language of the common people. The worship of Manasa also inspired poets to fabricate the story of the godling into an artificial Purana in the local tongue so as to give her an appropriate habitation in the Hindu pantheon. Music of a high order including compositions in classical Indian ragas was also employed for the telling of the sacred tales.

Three metrical varieties are in use throughout the period—pada or payāra, dulari or duladi, and chabi, all in rhyming couplets.

The couplets are generally closed at the end of either the first line or the second. The metre is aksaravrtta, that is counted by the number, rather than matrika, which is counted by length of syllables. A pada verse contains two feet of 14 syllables with a pause generally but not always after the eighth syllable. In a dulari verse (laghu tripadī) the two lines are each divided into three feet of 6, 6 and 8 syllables, the first two rarely rhyming. In chabi versification (dirgha tripadi) each line is divided into three feet of 8, 8 and 10 syllables, the first two generally rhyming. In the lyrics of the giti-kāvyas there are apparent irregularities in syllable divisions; but these irregularities were adjusted according to exigencies of musical quantities. Pitambara calls all the various metrical patterns of the songs lācādi (Skt. rathyākāra), a name applied to the bhanga tripadi versification (8, 8, 14) in later ages of poetry. He classifies lācādi chanda into lācādi chanda, lācādipada-chanda, lācādi nāţa-chanda, lācādi madhya-chanda, lācādi dīrgha-chanda.; but the classification is not perfectly clear to us as this sort of nomenclature is found only in one manuscript of this poet's Uşā-parinaya. Sankaradeva in places mentions hrasva-dirgha chanda. The word payara occurs in the text of Mādhava Kandali's Rāmāyana and sometimes has the general meaning of rhymed couplets of varying length. It is specifically Eastern Magadhan as Dr. S. K. Chatterji has pointed out and has only recently been practised in North-Indian languages like Maithili. The word chabi is found in the text of Giti-rāmāyaṇa; it possibly derives from Skt. Satpadī, Hindī chappai, chapai, a metre with six feet. The word duladi, dulari or duladi can be connected with Hindī duladī, 'an ornament worn by women with two rows of beads'.

CARYAPADAS

Before we enter into a consideration of the Assamese poets preceding the emergence of Vaiṣṇava literature, we have to notice the Caryās or Caryāpadas, which register certain phonological and morphological peculiarities which "have come down in an unbroken continuity through early to modern Assamese", A postfourteenth century manuscript called Caryācarya-viniścaya, with 47 Caryās (one incomplete) out of the original total of 50, was discovered in Nepāl in 1904 by Mm. Haraprasād Śāstrī. The names of twentythree poets who composed these mystic lyrics are among the eightyfour Siddhapuruṣas (teachers) worshipped by the Mahāyāna Buddhists of Tibet and Nepal. Dr. Giuseppe Tucci points out that in the Tibeten works Grub to'b and bKa'babs bdun ldan the Siddha Mīnanātha is described as a fisherman from Kāmarūpa.⁴ Tārānātha also describes Siddha Mīna as a fisherman in the east of India in Kāmarūpa.⁵ Two short couplets from the old Kāmarūpa dialect of Mīnanātha are grafted into the Sanskrit commentary on Caryā 21 (Bhusukapāda's composition).

^{3.} B. Kakati, Assamese, its Formation and Development, 1941, § 15.

kahanti guru paramārthera bāṭa karmakuraṅga samādhika pāṭa kamala vikasila kahiha ṇa jamarā kamalamadhu pibibi dhoke na bhamarā

Kāmarūpa or ancient Assam has been variously connected with latter-day developments of Buddhism like Vajrayāna and Sahajayāna and with some of the Siddhapuruṣas.⁶ It is thus likely that at best some of the Caryās and the Caryā writers were in some way or other had something to do with Kāmarūpa. Dr. S. K. Chatterji terms the dialect of these poems a form of old Bengali in its basis, greatly influenced by Saurasenī Apabhramsa and occasionally by Sanskrit and literary Prākrits.⁷ But as Dr. Bloch has said, "We may call it Oriental because it is found in Eastern texts and because there are some Eastern influences, but it is not so if we wish to find in it the base of the modern Eastern languages." Dr. Kakati seeks to conclude that the language of Bauddha Gān o Dohā and Kṛṣṇa-kārtana as forming a pre-Bengali and pre-Assamese period with certain dialect groups which may be designated as Eastern Magadhan Apabhramsa.⁹

Dr. P. C. Băgchi considers the 8th-10th centuries A.D. as the date of composition of the caryās. The contents of these poems are of a highly mystic nature centering round esoteric doctrines of Sahajayāna and erotistic practices of the Sahajiyās. In form the Caryās may be termed lyric and stand comparison with the songs

^{4.} J. A. S. B. (New Series), 1930, p. 133.

Dr. Bhupendranath Datta, Mystic Tales of Lāmā Tārānātha, 1944, p. 56. Also see Grünwedel, Baessler-Archiv, Band V, p. 152, cited in IHQ., Vol. VI, p. 181.

M. Neog: "Buddhism in Kāmarūpa". IHQ., Vol. XXVII, No. 2, June, 1951, pp. 144-ff.

^{7.} The Origin and Development of the Bengali Language, 1926, Vol. I, § 62.

Quoted by Dr. P. C. Bagchi: "The Sibitants in the Buddhist dohas", Indian Linguistics, Vol. V, p. 356.

^{9.} Assamese, its Formation and Development, § 21.

of Mankara, Durgāvara, Śańkaradeva and other poets of the following ages. The metres employed are of the matravrtta type, being mostly pādākulaka or caupāī, which originated in the late M.I.A. period. We do not however get the specifically vernacular type of payara of fourteen letters (syllables) that is common with the immediately pre-Sankaradeva poets. But here is the prototype of payāra and tripadī versifications. Rhyming is a regular feature,

A

TRANSLATIONS AND ADAPTATIONS MĀDHAVA KANDALI

The Rāmāyaṇa. By far the most considerable poet of the period under review is Mādhava Kandali. In rendering into Assamese verse the Uttarā-kānda of the Rāmāyana Sankaradeva, the greatest Assamese poet of all times, pays as warm and high a tribute to this predecessor of his as was paid by Shakespeare to "that noble shepherd", Christopher Marlowe. Sankaradeva calls Kandali an "unerring predecessor poet" and likens him to a mighty elephant, in whose comparison he himself is but a small rabbit.10 The pre-Sankaradeva poet says that he is called Kaviraja Kandali, that Mādhava Kandali is his other name, and that day and night, whether asleep or awake, he meditates upon Rāma's name.11 In other places he calls himself Mādhava Kandali Vipra or Dvijarāja Mādhava Kandali.12 There is no doubt that he was a Brāhmana of eminence, that Kavirāja is his epithet as a great poet, possibly the greatest of his time, and that this title was conferred on him, may be, · by some assembly of scholars or, more probably, by his patron monarch, to whom we are presently coming. Kandali also is a title, common to several Assamese poets (Rudra Kandali, Ananta Kandali, Śridhara Kandali, Rucinātha Kandali), and to Brāhmaņa

10. Asamiya Satkanda Ramayana, pub. by Prasannalal Chaudhuri, Barpeta, 1941, Uttarā-kānda, p. 472.

pürvvakavi apramādi mādhava kandali ādi pade viracilà rāma-kathā hastira dekhiya lada šašā yena phāre mārga mora bhaila tehnaya avasthā āmākese buliwaya 11. kavirāja kandali ye mādhava kandali āro nāma sapone sacite mañi jñāna kāya vākya mane aharniše cinto rāma rāma.

12. Ibid., pp. 218, 259, etc.

emissaries sent out to different foreign states by the Ähom court (e.g., Ratna Kandali, Mādhava Kandali, Sāgara Kandali, Candra Kandali, all mentioned in old chronicles). The Kandali poets were all reputed as scholars and the royal emissaries also had of necessity to be well-educated people. Ananta Kandali says that he secured that name of his in scholarly disputations (tarkata labhilā nāma ananta kandali). It is quite likely that the title Kandali means a logician or one expert in scriptural disputation and that it could not be a hereditary one. It cannot be said if this title had anything to do with the locality called Kandali in the Nowgong district, but it is certain that some of the Kandalis named above did belong to this place.

Mādhava Kandali says that he wrote the Rāmāyaṇa verses at the request of the Varāha king Śrī-mahā-māṇikya for edification of all people:

kavirāja kandali ye āmākese buliwaya kariloho sarvvajana-bodhe rāmāyaņa supayāra śrī-mahā-māṇikya ye varāha rājāra anurodhe.

It has not so far been possible to place Śri-mahāmanikya's time and place beyond doubt. Mādhavachandra Bardalai, who had the credit of bringing out the first printed edition of Kandali's Rāmāyana, in his Preface surmised that Śrī-mahā-mānikya must be one of the three Kachārī kings of Jayantāpura (Jaintias) with the surname of Mānika, Vijaya-mānika, Dhana-mānika and Yaśa-manika. The Kachārī kings of Jayantāpura were known as 'Varāhīrājās' styled themselves as 'Jayantāpureśvaras' and ruled over a vast territory extending to the modern district of Nowgong, from the twelfth to the fourteenth century A.D. Bardalai further seeks to connect the term varaha in the text with Bodo or Boro, the name of the Tibeto-Burmans who settled and ruled in Assam. He concludes that Kandali's Rāmāyana belongs to the fourteenth or fifteenth century and that the poet himself was a man of the present Nowgong district.13 But Sir Edward Gait gives 1564-80 and 1596-1605 as the probable periods of reign of Vijaya-mānika and Dhana-manika respectively.14 These dates cannot be that of Śrimahā-mānikya, who patronised Kandali, a poet of a date definitely anterior to Sankaradeva (1449-1568 A.D.).

Asamiya Sahityar Caneki (Typical Selections from Assamese Literature), vol. III, pt. I, C. U., 1923, pp. 313 ff.
 A History of Assam, 1926, pp. 260 f.

Pandit Hemchandra Goswāmī writes, "Mahāmānikya was a king of Barāhī Kachārīs and he ruled about the middle of the 14th century at Dimāpur. In an old Āhom Burañjī the seventh generation of Barāhī kings, Detsing, the great-great-grandson of Mahāmānikya, was the contemporary of the Ahom king Dihingīyā Rajā".15 In another place he writes, "The Barāhī constituted a branch of the Hinduised Kachāris. Before the advent of the Ahoms, the Barāhī kings were ruling over the whole of the south bank of the Brahmaputra with their capital at Sonapur, somewhere near Sadiyā. His probable date is 1347 A.D."16 Detsing or Dercom-phā's contemporary Dihingīyā-rajā, king of Asama, reigned from 1495 to 1439 so that Mahā-māṇi-phā's time comes to the middle of the fourteenth century. From the names of places like Nāmacām, Barhāt, Soņāpur, Bānpur, etc. in the Kāchāri chronicle, art. 23, on which Goswami's statement is based, it would appear that the Kachārī capital was somewhere in the Sibsagar subdivision about the position now occupied by the Banphera, Sonāri, Barāhī and other tea-estates, 17

Kanaklal Barua agreeing with Goswāmī takes Kandali to be a man of the latter part of the fourteenth century and adds that the Barāhī kings might have at one time ruled over the Kapilī valley. Kālirām Medhi considers Mādhava Kandali to have flourished in the middle of the fourteenth century but calls Śrīmahā-māṇikya a king of Tripurā. One Mahā-māṇikya reigned in Tripurā, 1396-1406. Some of his ancestors reigned in the Kapilī valley and during the reign of the succeeding king Śrī-dharma-māṇikya two Assamese Brāhmaṇas — Śukreśvara and Vāṇeśvara—composed Tripurā-rāja-mālā. Dr. B. Kakati takes Śrī-mahā-māṇikya to be a Kachārī king of Jayantāpura and Kandali to be a native

^{15.} Cf. Hemchandra Goswami's article in the Bāhī, Vol. XVIII. The Burañjī here referred to has now been published by the Department of Historical and Antiquarian Studies, Assam, as Kachārī Burañjī, 1936. The name of the king is really Mahā-māṇi-phā in this chronicle. It is quite probable that this is the actual name of Kandali's patron king, where -phā is only an additional particle, attached to names of kings of Asama, Jayantā and Trīpurā. Mādhava Kandali in one place, p. 218, calls the king Mahā-māṇi. Is it also probable that Śrī-mahā-māṇikya is a calligraphical error for Śrī-mahā-māṇi-phā?

^{16.} Descriptive Catalogue of Assamese Manuscripts, C. U., 1930, p. 139.

Benudhar Sharmă also points it out in a local periodical, Răij, vol. I, ro. 2, Śrāvana, 1856 Śaka.

^{18.} Early History of Kamarapa, 1933, pp. 320 f.

Assamese Grammar and Origin of the Assamese Language, 1936, intro.
 xci.

of central Assam now represented by the district of Nowgong. He further sets the fourteenth century as the lower limit of Kandali's age on linguistic considerations. There is a large number of archaic forms in Kandali's language. Two of the Pāla kings of Kāmarūpa, Indrapāla and Dharmapāla, styled themselves as vārāha or śrī-vārāhā in their copper-plate grants, claiming descent from the Boar incarnation of Viṣṇu and the Earth. A branch of the Bodo race, as has already been seen, is known as Varāhīs or Barāhīs.

In Kathā-guru-carita²² the name of the guru of Rāgha' Ācārya who came to inspect the school kept by Śaṅkaradeva's teacher Mahendra Kandali is given as Mādhava Kandali. This Mādhava Kandali may very well be the great Rāmāyana poet. It is not stated if Mādhava Kandali of the hagiography was still living when Śaṅkaradeva as a boy read at Mahendra Mandali's school, but he may be calculated to have been living about 1400 A.D.

Thus while Śrī-mahā-māṇikya cannot be identified with any amount of exactitude, the consensus of opinion of scholars is on the side of taking the poet Mādhava Kandali as a man of the fourteenth century at the latest. It is therefore apparent that Mādhava Kandali's Rāmāyaṇa was the first of its kind in modern Indian languages, the Bengali and Hindī versions of Kṛttivāsa and Tulsīdās being works of the sixteenth century. As K. K. Handiqui has pointed it out, this very early version of the Rāmāyaṇa in a provincial language may be needful in fixing the reading and considering the history of the original work of Vālmīkī.

Unfortunately for us the Ādi- and Uttarā-kāṇḍas are missing in all manuscripts of Mādhava Kandali's Rāmāyaṇa. It cannot be told if these two cantos were not rendered by the poet at all. He speaks of Śrī-mahā-māṇikyā's orders and his writing upon it the seven-cantoed Rāmāyaṇa in verse from (sātakāṇḍa rāmāyaṇa²²²a padabandhe nibandhilo), at the end of the Laṅkā-kāṇḍa. In the ^{20.} Assamese, its Formation and Development, 1941, §§ 23-24.

Kāmarūpa-śāsanāvalī, pp. 122, 154.
 ed. by U. C. Lekharu, 1951, p. 26.

²²a. It is to be noted that in the Assamese versions of Rāmāyaṇa by Mādhava Kandali (14th cent.), Durgāvara Kāyastha and Ananta Kandali (16th cent.), Ananta Kāyastha (17th cent.) and Raghunātha Mahanta (18th cent.) the Bāla- and the Uttara- Kāndas are found wanting. This would certainly draw pointed attention to the view of Orientalists that these initial and final cantoes are later additions to the original 5-cantoed Rāma epic (Farquhar, Religious Literature of India, Oxford, 1920, p. 46). Our suspicion also grows over the correctness of reading of the word Sātakanda.

Kathā-guru-carita,²³ it is stated that as Ananta Kandali tried to outdo Mādhava Kandali's work, Mādhavadeva and Śankaradeva wrote the Ādi- and Uttara-kāndas in verse and gave the old work a new lease of life.

A powerful story-teller as Mādhava Kandali is, he seems to have recited his verses to the king, his patron, and courtiers, indicating change-over from time to time (mādhava bolanta aita ācho ehimāna, let me leave this here) and directed the course of the narration as the latter desired. Mādhava Kandali's fidelity to the original ślokas is remarkable and he renders them into his own language with wonderful force and brevity. The famous śloka in the Lankā-kāṇḍa:

deśe deśe kalatrāni deśe deśe ca bandhavāh tam tu deśam na pasyāmi yatra bhrātā sahodarah is rendered with ease into the short but expressive couplet, bhāryyā puttra bandhu yata pāi yathā tathā hena natu dekhohō sodara pāi kathā.²⁴

Kandali constantly tries to stick to the original, to make it brief, and to keep away any fabricated material from entering into the texture of his work; but at the words of Māhā-māṇikya he introduces a little rasa as if putting a quantity of clarified butter into milk and stirring it:

sātakāṇḍa rāmāyaṇa padabandhe nibandhilō lambhā parihari sāroddhṛta mahā-māṇikyara bole kāvya-rasa kicho dilō dugdhaka mathile yena ghṛta.²⁵

In sweetness and sublimity, Vālmīki's work is considered by Kandali to be equal to the Vedas (mahā-ṛṣi vālmīkiye: rāmāyaṇa karilanta: sākṣāte jānibā yena veda); 26 but he also makes a responsible statement in this connection:

O people in the assembly, you have just listened to the story of Rāma, full of various rasas and extremely sacred. Do you be pleased with it and forgive me my faults of omission

^{23.} p. 119.

^{24.} p. 338

^{25.} Lanka-kanda, p. 448.

^{26.} Lanka-kanda, p. 448.

and commission. Vālmīki composed this work in prose and verse (metre). I have considered it with care and what I have been able to comprehend I have briefly rendered into verse. Who can understand all shades of rasas? Birds fly according as they have wings; poets compose their works up to the popular taste (loka vyavahāre). They put in something fabricated by them along with the original, because this (what the poets write) is no divine revelation (deva-vānī) but things of earth (laukika kathā).²⁷

The poet himself is ever on his guard against laukika kathā and, reassuring his fidelity to the original, says this to scholars:

If you open the (original) book and do not find these things (which I have written), condemn me as you would.²⁸

It is remarkable that in Kandali's work in the present form there is a note of propaganda, so common with the Vaiṣṇava poets of later ages, celebrating the miraculous powers of the name of God. This note of propaganda and consideration of Rāma as an incarnation of Viṣṇu are foreign to the original Rāmāyaṇa but are evident in a much later work called Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa. Can the presence of these elements in Mādhava Kandali's version of the Rāmāyaṇa be taken as an influence of this work? There is however a more probable explanation afforded by Kathā-guru-carita, which says that Mādhavadeva and Sankaradeva completed the Rāmāyaṇa by adding the first and last cantos to it and that Mādhavadeva inserted upadeśa (teachings of devotion, bhakti) where there was only śubha śubha (simple benedictory verses). This is tantamount to saying that the Rāmāyaṇa was revised, edited and brought on to a line with literary works of the Bhakti school.

In spite of Kandali's attempt at brevity and fidelity to Vālmīki, he does not leave off opportunities to revel in the element of sensuousness, counted as enhancing kāvyarasa. Sītā appeals to Rāma

^{27.} Kişkindhyā-kāṇḍa, p. 259.

^{28.} Lankā-kānda, p. 448.

^{29.} U. C. Lekharu, Asamiya Ramayana Sahitya, 1948, p. 40.

^{30.} p. 119. It may possibly be said that the absence of elaborate bhakti upadeáas or advice to take up devotion to Hari along with the colophons should have been a characteristic feature of pre-Vaisnava literature: but as the great Vaisnava movement and literature have intervened between that period and ourselves, it is difficult for us now to generalise very widely on this point.

^{31.} M. Neog. Śri-śri-śankaradeva, ed. 2, 1952, p. 148.

not to leave her behind when going on exile, because it is now that her youth has blossomed fit for enjoyment.³² In Kişkindhyā Rāma's body is sore afflicted with the pangs of desire.³³ He remembers Sītā who must also be so tormented by Cupid and by the feeling that youth was fast passing away.³⁴

Descriptions of action (fights and movements), of places, palaces and natural scenery, of human beauty and hideousness, are lively, swift, elegant and graphic. The Sundarākānda is particularly rich in respect of such pictures. Mādhava Kandali can, with a few strokes or through mere sound of the phraseology, make beauty charming and hideousness repulsive. In describing life and action, towns and natural scenery he keeps a constant eye on the Assamese way of life and Assam's flora and fauna. The dialogues are often brought to the level of common people's conversation, There is a rare pleasantness in his humour which often comes out with the brilliance of personal observation in the form of an imagery, a simile or an idiomatic turn of speech. Free use of idiomatic, colloquial and homely expressions is a charming and permanent feature of his language. Some expressions would to-day be considered as verging on indecency or low taste but these had a particular appeal at least to some of Kandali's listeners in those days.

Even though Mādhava Kandali's was no original work, we get in it fair glimpses of Assamese society of his time. When the poet constantly refers to the six different methods (nīti) of approach to an enemy (sandhi, vigraha, āsana, dvaidha, sakhya, yāna), or the duties of a minister or royal messenger, 35 we cannot help thinking, that these had their practice in the politics of Śrī-mahā-māṇikya's reign. The likening of the monkey army to a swarm of locusts covering the firmament seems to be a topical reference. The occurrence of the word sandhikai may be a side-influence of the Ahoms who had already established a kingdom in the eastern part of the Brahmaputra valley in the beginning of the thirteenth century.

^{32.} Ayodhyā-kāṇḍa, p. 118.

^{33.} Kişkindhyā-kāṇḍa, pp. 241-42.

^{34.} Sundarā-kāṇḍa, p. 306.

^{35.} Ayodhyā-kāṇḍa, p. 100; Sundarā-kànḍa, pp. 283, 307.

^{36.} Kişkindhyā-kāṇḍa, pp. 246, 247.

^{37.} Ayodhya-kanda, p. 142, sandhikai, mod. sandikai, written in English as handiqui. A sandikai is a person who belong to seven aristocratic noble families among the Ahoms, who could be appointed a Barbaruva (chief justice) or Barphukan (commander-in-chief and viceroy in the western part of the kingdom).

Varņāśrama-dharma seems to have been piously obeyed: the four castes (cāri jāti) are mentioned in places. Different castes and professions are also referred to: Brāhmaņa, Kṣatriya, Vaiśya, Kāyaṣṭha, Daivajña, Telī (oilman), Tātī (weaver), Soṇāri (gold-smith), Kāhār (bell-metal worker), Śaṅkhāri (workers on ivory or shell), Baṇiyā, Camār (cobbler), Kamār (blacksmith), Sūtār (carpenter, sawyer), and Dhobā. The Hādis and Caṇḍālas are considered as impure. In the Ayodhyā-kāṇḍa Kandali provides a small picture of a Yogī (Nāth-panthī), running in the train of people following Rāma to the forest, which would not evoke much respect:

The Yogi, had his ragged wallet hung on his shoulder. He had his dowādaś kāṭhi (platter sometimes in the form of a trident) in his hand. He was tired, and his begging wallet dropped down. He cried 'Siva! Siva!' all the time. ... He threw away all his gods of worship (that he was carrying in the form of idols).

Națas (dancing class) are slightingly named. In several places the poet exhibits good knowledge of astrology. Although there are references to Văsudeva and Vișnu, who is in a few instances considered as incarnating as Rāma (which, we fear, may be an interpolated idea), Siva and Sakti cults seem to be more familiar with the poet and blood (goat) sacrifices provide him with a constantly used simile. Candi or Rana-candi comes in for reference in many places. The worship of fire with strangulation of a black goat as sacrifice is described.38 Mantras and rakṣās and ganapati-ghaṭas, signifying worship of Ganeśa, son of Siva, are also spoken of. There is the mention of daulas, temples, with ghatas, pot-shaped structures placed at the top. Funeral rites are described including burning of the body with fuel of mango trees (āma-gāṇḍi) poked with a large pole (khocanī dāṇḍi), daśa-piṇḍa (ten offerings of food to the deceased consecutively on ten days following death), kākabali (offering to crows) of rau fish (Labeo rohita) and birds, and snāna-bali. Many common customs and popular beliefs are here seen: to touch another's head as indicating assurance; to enquire of a person's caste (jāti-kula) on the first meeting; to throw away or wash thoroughly cooking basins and the oven when touched by impure persons or with impure things; to look for omens when setting out on an expedition; and so on. Strī-ācāras (rites performed by women on auspicious occasions like marriage, etc.) are alluded to in connection with Rāma's proposed coronation. Different types of children's games are enumerated in the Sundara-kanda.39

Mādhava Kandali's work on the whole carries the impression of real life, of engaging story-telling and fine poetry. It is in the hands of Kandali that the rather artificial language with occasional betrayals of the colloquial, which was employed in the religious, biographical and even historical literature of Assam till the advent of British rule, was set and standardized. This is a language embellished with a music of its own, with but simple figures of speech like alliteration, simile, metaphor. There is also an amount of conventionalism in the use of these figures of speech. As Dr. B. K. Barua has said, "It appears that the legacy of rich and beautiful diction which the poet of the Assamese version of the Rāmāyana left behind exercised a tremendous influence upon Sankaradeva and his immediate successors." There are other material influences of Mādhava Kandali on his successors. Durgāvara's Giti-rāmāyana (as we shall presently see) and Ananta Kandali's version in many places only plagiarize Mādhava Kandali. The prose version of Raghunatha Mahanta (late eighteenth century) is also very largely indebted to the same poet. Thus the whole Rāmāyana literature in Assamese is pervaded by Mādhava Kandali's personality.

Devajit (?)—This work⁴⁰ describing the fights of Arjuna with Indra, accompanied by his heavenly hosts and Mahādeva, as the king of gods refused to invite Kṛṣṇa to a rājasūya sacrifice he had proposed to perform, is ascribed to Mādhava Kandali. But it is very much doubtful if this was his composition. All through the printed edition of the work the poet calls himself Mādhava and nowhere Mādhava Kandali. In a manuscript noticed by Paṇḍit Hemchandra Goswāmī in his Descriptive Catalogue of Assamese Manuscripts, pp. 44-46, the name Mādhava Kandali is found. This may very well be an interpolation. The book is not worthy of the great 'unerring' poet. Nowhere does the poet introduce himself. The source of the contents itself is doubtful. In the printed edition, verses 576 and 939, the story is said to be taken from the eighteen

^{39.} p. 267.

^{40.} published by Harichandra Dev Goswami and Dharmadatta Lahkar, 1912. In the Department of Historical and Antiqurian Studies MS (MS 622) the work is alternatively called Indra-Arjuna-samvāda-kathā, vv. 1399-1400; it is said to have been retold from the 18 Purānas, vv. 1398, 1213; the story is narrated by Vaisampāyana before Janamejaya, v. 1291; and the author is 'Mādhava Kandali' vv. 1200, 1400.

Purāṇas (aṣṭādaśa purāṇa) while in the manuscript it is supposed to be found in Padma Purāṇa. Some past-participle forms in-ibā-are found in it but this alone in an imitative and artificial language could not be taken as a conclusive proof for the work being of pre-Śaṅkaradeva times, the curious use of the conjunctive particle -er-in verbs being absent. The work attempts to prove the superiority of nāma-dharma over penance, sacrifice and the like and in places points to the futility of human life, youth, relations and wealth. There are two other works Tāmradhvajar Yuddha and Pātāla-kāṇ-da, 41 both adaptations from Jaiminīyāśvamedha, ascribed to Mādhava Kandali. Our conclusion is that both Devajit and these two works were composed by some second Mādhava Kandali belonging to the post-Śaṅkaradeva period.

HARIVARA VIPRA41a

In his Vabruvāhanar Yuddha, Harivara Vipra or Harivara Miśra showers benedictions on his patron king Durlabhanārāyaṇa of Kamatā thus:

jaya jaya narapati durlabhanārāyana rājō kāmapure bhailā vīravara saputra-bāndhave yebe sukhe rāja karantoka jīvantoka sahasra vatsara tāhāna rājyata thita sādhu-jana-manonīta aśvamedha viracita sāra vipra harivara kai gaurīra caraṇa sei padabandhe karilo pracāra (225)

41. Tāmradhvajar Yuddha, D.H.A.S. MS 524. See vv. 173-ff., 181-ff., 211-c; Pātāla-kānda (catalogued as Uttarrā-kānda Rāmāyaṇa) D.H.A.S. MS. 41a. In the market editions of this poet's Vabruvāhanar Yuddha his name is printed as 'Harihara' which I consider to be a misreading for 'Harivara'. In the MSS of both his works here under review it is always spelt as 'Harivara'. Names, with the epithet of some deity forming the first part and the word para (boon) forming the second part, seem to be current at this stage of history (e.g., Candīvara Durgāvara); whereas we do not come across any personal name composite of names of two deities.

Details about Durlabhanārāyana, the celebrated patron of literature are even now lacking. Sankaradeva in his Rukminiharana-kavya says that on his great-great-grandfather Candivara or Devidasa was conferred land grants in Temuniyabandha (Bardowā in Nowgong) by King Durlabhanārāyana. This is variously repeated in the different biographies of Sankaradeva. Calculating from the date of Sankaradeva's birth, that is 1449 A.D., scholars have arrived at about the second quarter of the fourteenth century (1330-50) or the latter part of the thirteenth century as the date of Durlabhanārāyaṇa's reign.42 So that becomes about the time when Harivara Vipra composed his Vabruvāhanar Yuddha and Lava-Kuśar Yuddha. There is quite a number of examples of the curious use of the conjunctive particle -er- and the past participle in -iba-, which are peculiar to the pre-Sankaradeva language.43 > pāsaribāra astrā-śastra manata paroka harāibāra mundagota āsibāra dekhi (569) khonta hāni manusyata lagāyera bisa tomāra cakrere yebe cindiyero gala (554)

> > Vabruvāhanar Yuddha.

śikhibara śaracaya saphalibo rane (127) śanāibāra śare tāra māthā nilā kāţi (302)

- Lava-Kuśar Yuddha.

In Śri-śri-Vamsigopāladevara caritra the name of Vamsigopāladeva's grandfather is Harivara Vipra, who was the rich and scholarly head (Bhūyā) of the village Vyāghrapindā (in North Lakhimpur). He is said to have rendered old Sanskrit works (bhārata purana) into Assamese verse, which may seem to be a specific reference to the two works under review. It is however difficult to imagine that the great great-grandfather of Sankaradeva (born 1371 Śaka) and the grandfather of Vamsīgopāla (born 1470 Śaka) were contemporaries.

42. B. Kakati, AFD., § 23; Kaliram Medhi, Prahlada-Carita, 1835 Saka, intro., p. x; B. K. Barua, Assamese Literature, P. E. N., 1941, p. 10.

43. B. Kakati, AFD., §§ 796, 828 f.

In a MS (D.H.A.S.) entitled Bhuyd-caritra, the genealogy of Cidananda Bhūyā, one of the Kāyasthas brought over by Durlabha to Kāmarūpa, the date of the king is given as 1220 Saka 1298 A.D. In old Assamese chronicles (burañji) there is reference to a latter-day Durlabhendra of Kamatā, a contemporary of Ahom king Cuhummung, Dihingiya Raja (1497-1539 A.D.).

The following seems to be an echo of Mādhava Kandali's Rāmāyana, which was possibly a fresh production when Vabruvāhanar Yuddha was written:

yibā kicho kicho khuji luri pāilā rāma yena lankā yānte.

 \propto Whatever people could catch hold of as at the time of Rāma's expedition against Laṅkā. \propto

In verse 176 of the same work there is the mention of Ceţiyās, a clan of aristocratic (camuwā) Āhoms who stood above the common people (kāḍā or pāik) and just below the rank of officers, to which at any time they could be raised. Two classes of spies constantly referred to in the Āhom chronicles are mentioned in Lava-Kuśar Yuddha: cor (verse 57) and phurā (verse 70). This possibly indicates that the poet was acquainted with the administration of the Āhoms or sometime even belonged to the Āhom kingdom.

In Vabru vāhanar Yuddha in rendering Jaimini's lines pañcapātakakartāram kim namnā'sya na tāritā, etc. (40. 41-42) Harivara writes:

> yito punu prāṇī pañcadevatā-yuguta yebese harika smare śuddha cittamane sakala pātaka hare tāṅka daraśane (596)44

In the description of the pumsavana ceremony Rama is described as worshipping pañcadevatā, the five deities (verse 38). When Vabruvahana set out for the war-field, he mentally bowed at the feet of Vasudeva (vasudeva-pade pranamila mane mana-verse 150). Krsna is generally referred to in Vabruvahanar Yuddha as Vasudeva, while the name Vasudeva by itself indicates nothing particular, the mention of the king's bowing down to Vasudeva read in conjunct with the references to pañcadevatā may be a sufficient indication of the prevalence in Assam and here an influence of the cult of Vasudeva before neo-Vaisnavism had its growth. Dr. B. Kakati writes of this cult of Vasudeva worship as propounded in Kālikā Purāņa: "The germ mantra of Vāsudeva consists of twelve syllables Om namo Bhagavate Vāsudevāya. Along with him a pentad of complementary deities are to be worshipped: Rāma, Kṛṣṇa, Brahmā, Śambhu, and Gauri. The two latter are never to be separated in worship."44a

A variant reading for devatā is pāpata.
 The Mother Goddess Kāmākhyā, 1948, p. 74.

The women attribute Citrangada's having an illustrious son to the worship of Hara and Gauri (kona punya thane hara gauri ārādhilā, verse 359). In Kālikā-Purāna the place (pītha) of Vāsudeva is indicated as being placed in the north-eastern region of Kāmarūpa. There is still a place called Vāsudevar Than in the North Lakhimpur subdivision which, though shorn of all past glory due to dilapidations caused by Nature, attracts a good number of visitors in the dry season. The two works of Harivara thus betray an atmosphere of pre-Sankaradeva times and of the north-eastern region (Lakhimpur), which came early to be overcome by the Ahoms.

Vabruvāhanar Yuddha.-Harivara Vipra takes the story of Vabruvāhanar Yuddha45 the fight between Arjuna and his son by Citrāngadā, King Vabruvāhana of Manipura, from chapters XXII-XXIV and XXXVII -XL and by the way narrates the story of King Nīladhvaja and queen Jvālā of Māhişmatīpura from chapters XIV-XV, Jaiminīyāśvamedha.46 In general the adapter keeps close to his original except when he feels the necessity of making a long story short or of avoiding abstruse details or where his imagination is warmed by soft sentiments. In the original the seven under-worlds are enumerated and also concisely described (38, 176-87); but this is avoided in the adaptation (verses 447 ff.) also the reference to a Hāṭakeśvara Śiva-linga on the river Bhogavatí in Pătăla possibly because a lingam of such a description would not be intelligible to the common reader. To describe different situations effectively he however utilizes his original observation in the form of homely similes. Arjuna tells Vabruvāhana that even though the latter came to him in a friendly manner, he had only found a foe:

> āge yena manuşýe laware kharatari chāga buli bāghar galata āche dhari manuşye erante galara nere bāghe

45. Asamiya Mahabharata | Aśvamedha Parvar antargata | Vabruvāhaparva, pub. by Sivanāth Bhattācharyya, first printed at the Radharaman Yantra, Calcutta; second edn. at Assam Commercial Press, Dibrugarh, January, 1925.

Vabruvāhanar Yuddha, Sācipāt MS, copied by une Ramānanda in 1661 Saka, Nowgong collection, K.A.S., Gauhati.

Vabruvāhanar Yuddha, ed. by B. K. Barua and M Neog, compiled from above two (MS).

46. Jaiminiyāśvamedhagrantha, printed by Hariprasāda at Gaņapata-Kṛṣṇa Press, 1960 Sambat, 1826 Śakābda.

Vabruvāhana retorts by saying that Arjuna had no credit in killing Bhīṣṇa, Karṇa and Droṇa as only some sly tricks were used in the matter.

kapāsa kāṭiyā śaśā diwaya lawara lokaka janāwe vṛkṣa pārilohō vara sehimate kuru-senā māri bhaila gaha (89)

Vṛṣaketu, son of Karṇa, by dint of his wonderful missiles, shot Vabruvāhana into the air; the latter however dropped down upon Vṛṣaketu, who then attempted to struggle out of his hold. Harivara compares the king to a strong and sinewy woman grinding mustard seeds and likens Vṛṣaketu to a fish under water trying to slip off from the catcher's hand.

uparata basi rājā duyo hāte āţe balavanta nārī yena besārka bāţe pānīra māchaka yena hāte āche dhari erālbāka lāgi kare ājora-ājuri (262)

Citrangada derides Vabruvahana who has killed his own father and is almost killing his mother with mental torments and says that he is far worse than Parasurama, who killed only one of his parents at the other's behests and even than crabs eating up their mother but sparing the father (verse 403-f). Descriptions of the several fights are generally faithful to the original; exaggerations are rare. Minor variations as in the number of missiles hurled by each hero are seen; but, for this scribes may very well be held responsible. The horrid scene created in the battlefield by Pradyumna's arrows (kāma-śara) as painted in the original is almost revolting and is made much less so by Harivara. The Dākinīs and Yoginis are mentioned by the Assamese poet only in one place (verses 138-39), whereas in Jaimini's work there is the foul display of the female Yakşas, sixtyfour Yoginis, dry-bodied Betālas, Bhairavas, Yaksas. Piśācas, Brahmagrahas, and jackals, all struck sore with Pradyumna's amorating missiles (23, 101-119; 24, 1-2). Harivara possibly did not relish this nauseating admixture of the erotic and the horrid or thought he would not be able to rouse his reader's imagination to its appreciation.

In the description of the fight between Vabruvāhana and Vrṣaketu, the most considerable one in the whole story, there is a bit of deviation from the original; but this consists mainly of the repetition of the same tactics and movements. The action of the fatal arrow, ardhacandra vāṇa, hurled by Vabruvāhana on Arjuna is described more elaborately than in Jaimini, which deepens the effect of horror on imagination.

In Jaiminīyāśvamedha (37. 31-43) when Arjuna sees that all the big heroes on his side were killed in battle by Vabruvāhana, he expresses apprehension before Vṛṣaketu that he would not be able to associate himself with the various final stages of the asvamedha sacrifice, which has now no prospect of being accomplished. In Hariyara's Assamese rendering Arjuna not only puts himself like this but also looks back with lyrical grief at his past achievements, so much contrasted with his present state of deplorability and much cherished connections with Kunti, Krsna, four brothers and Draupadi. These personal touches provide Ariuna's words of woe with a deeply pathetic note. As the poet is thus able on his own account to probe into the depths of woe, he is also capable of jovial moods and can add coldur to festive occasions. In the description of the scene of Vabruvāhana's surrender unto Arjuna, Harivara succeeds in creating a festive atmosphere; and a whole band of musical instruments as the following (not mentioned in the original) is invoked: tala, dhola, bheri, bhemachi, dhumachi, dagara, vāmšī, temachi, khikichi, mādalī, remachi, tokārī, kāmsī, vīnā, karatāla, jhājhāri, dubala. The victory celebrations in Manipura after the war are also described by the poet in his own way. Description of human physiognomy and of cities with grand buildings seems to have been the forte of old Assamese poets and Harivara was no exception to the rule. He broadens the canvas on which Jaimini paints the city of Manipura. In place of a few birds in jewels and animals in gold on the walls of the palaces, he gives quite a flock of them in his own way from his own observation. He adds to the number of gods and illustrations of women in the frescoes. Whereas Jaimini says that Arjuna's head shining with earornaments was severed and fell on earth (tāvadvānena tīvrena śiro jvalitakundalam || chinnam parthasya tarasa nipapata dharatale, 38. 61-62) Harivara provides details to show how beautiful the head was.

Lava-Kuśar Yuddha,47 is another work by Harivara Vipra. The story of Kuśa and Lava's fight with Rāma's army in the outskirts of Vālmīki's hermitage is taken from chapters XXII-XXVI of Jaiminīyāśvamedha. In the beginning of chapter XXV Jaimini casually compared the fight between Arjuna and Vabruvāhana to that between Rāma and his son Kuśa:

samgrāmastvabhavadrājan vabhruvāhanapārthayoļ yathā kuśasya rāmasya vājimedhahaye dhṛte —25. 1.

On further questioning by King Janamejaya the sage was led to tell the tale of the untoward fight between Rama and his sons. In his Vabruvāhanar Yuddha Harivara refers to it (verses 177-f.) but leaves it aside to be told as an independent story, which he does here in Lava-Kuśar Yuddha (verses 1). In the nomenclature of this work Lava's name is placed before Kusa's, although the latter is the elder. In Assamese poetry as in common lore of the people this reversed order is always followed; even the great Śankaradeva went so far as to say, jyestha bhaila lava kanisthara kuśa nām (Uttarā-kānda). In the text of this work however Harivara takes Kuśa and Lava in their proper order. It may be recalled here that this episode of the Rāmāyana as retold by Jaimini has been rendered into Assamese verse by a later poet, Gangarama Dāsa, and into payara interspersed with lyrics by three poets, Gangādāsa, Subuddhirāyā and Bhavānīdāsa. In this adaptation also Harivara closely follows his original source but with a con-

 Lava-Kuśar Yuddha, 'Ejan mahākavir dvārā Asamīyā bhāṣāt racita' (anonymous), Bhattacharyya Agency, Dibrugarh, 1926.

Lava-Kuśar Yuddha, sacipat MS, obtained from the late Rāṇi Māhendri Devi of Āhom rāj family, Gauhati collection (No. 1), K.A.S.

Lava Kusar Yuddha compiled and edited by M. Neog from the above. The MS contains folios 1-11 from one copy and folios 26-34 from another, with the 34th folio being simply illustrated and not written upon. Every folio of the MS is illuminated. The illustrations in the second copy are slightly different in detail from and seems to be an improvement on those of the first. The paintings belong to the Rājput-Mogul tradition as all old Assamese paintings do. But this MS deserves to be particularly noted as bearing signs of attempt, at times successful even, at individualisation of human figures in place of conventionalisation and stylisation which is a general trait of old Assamese painting.

Another thing to be noted in the MS is the mark of ānji, at the beginning of the first folio which is then followed by the usual salute to Kṛṣṇa; Śrī-Kṛṣṇāya namo namah ||. This particular mark is associated with Tantricism and it is not known if this was transmitted from the original MS of Harivara (which would then be taken as indicating his religion) to later copies of the work.

stant eve on chances of reduction. His statement in this connection is very much significant even as far as all translations and adaptations of old Assamese poetry are concerned.

> kāhāro harisa pade śloka eka gaila kāhāro harisa višrita lambhā thaila savāro āniyā sāra vipra harivara bole aśvamedha-yajña-pada rucikara,

∝ Some (readers) are glad that a pada (a single verse in Assamese) covers a whole śloka; and others are happy when they see much extraneous matter added. Vipra Harivara takes the essence of all (many places) and sings these tasteful verses of the asvamedha sacrifice. x

The abduction of Sītā, the war of Lanka, Sītā's ordeal by fire, Rāma's return to Ayodhyā with Laksmana, Hanumān and others are summarily mentioned. Vasistha and other sages greet them with utterance of the Vedas (pathanto mangalasüktam - Jaimini, 25. 8). The mothers, Bharata, and others of kith and kin receive them cordially. Rama reigns in munificence for a thousand and nine years (ten millenia in Jaimini). Sītā conceives and at the end of the fourth month of conception Rāma dreams of banishing Sītā, In the original Rāma directly asks Vasistha to institute the pumsavana ceremony to avert any dangers of misconception. Harivara's Rāma however asks Vasistha (as an ordinary custom goes in the country) for phalitā or interpretation of the dreams and also to organize pumsavana (As. puhan-biyā). Vasistha utters susvapna, susvapna, 'a good dream, a good dream', as the custom is, and prescribes measures for the arrangement of the ceremony. Harivara then describes the ceremony in an independent manner possibly based upon observation of real practice. Unlike Jaimini Harivara makes Rāma give some thought to the monkey-guests (a point of much interest for the common reader), consult Bharata in the matter of erection of a large pandal (which is done by silpins in the original) and summon his father-in-law Janaka specially for the purpose of pouring holy water on his and Sītā's heads. In place of Bharata's playing on a vinā and singing songs addressed to Sītā, he sings songs improvised on good kings of old (jorā-nām as they are called in Assamese). Janaka puts the tips of Râma's and Sita's hair together and pours water over them. Harivara gives us an indication of the custom of those days when he explains how to fulfil a woman's dohada by offering her all sorts of palatable dishes.

bhāla kari bhuñjāwe suhṛda āche yāra chai loṇa puṣparāje dei ākhai cirā dadhi dugdha ghṛta madhu lavanu śarkkarā (46)

A cara (spy) reports how a washerman has spoken ill of Rāma when driving away his own wife as she returns home with her father after a stay of four days at the latter's place. Harivara gives a popular colour to the whole story and makes the uncouth washerman say such savage words to his father-in-law, "Go home before I kill you with beating. I do not want her. You may keep her to yourself or bestow her on your son."

Rāma's conflicting sentiments when he decides upon relinquishing Sītā are brought out effectively by the poet in a few terse verses. He later makes Rāma shed tears like a child and get almost mad with grief while asking Laksmana to put Sītā in the forest. The chariot horses also drop down as if brokenhearted. The poet however avoids the charioteer's words speaking of the horses' unwillingness to gallop on the forest road (J., 27. 64-68). Harivara produces the effect of a whole forest with the enumeration of more than seventy varieties of flowering and fruit-laden trees. After Laksmana divulges the secret of Rama's orders for banishment the dialogue between Sitā and Laksmana and the description of Sita's maddening grief is much reduced; and the sympathetic grief of wild animals, birds and inanimate objects is practically avoided in the Assamese rendering. The fight between Lava, a boy of twelve years, and Satrughna's army and Satrughna himself, is on the other hand narrated with unabated effect of horror.

When Satrughna carries away the unconscious Lava in a chariot, the hermit boys report it to Sītā. Their words are much elaborated and Sītā's grief is a bit exaggerated by the Assamese poet. While in Jaimini she is patient and tries to hold back tears, Harivara's Sītā cries sore with grief and goes off into a swoon and when she recovers from it she invokes the sun and the ten gods of directions saying that if she is sinless and chaste, there should be an end to her grief and Lava should live till Kuśa meets him. The dialogue between Sītā and Kuśa after this is made much homely with a deeper touch of motherly concern for one son lying dead and the other having to face the cataclysm. Thus with small deviations from the original Harivara tells the story in a way that would be effective with the common readers and listeners, Harivara is one of the major poets of the period. His work of translation and adaptation possesses a strong flavour of original genius and poetry. In use of idiomatic expressions, similes and metaphors he is next only to Mādhava Kandali.

HEMA SARASVATĪ

Prahlāda-caritra.—In this very small narrative of a hundred verses Hema Sarasvatī introduces himself thus;

kamatā-mandala

durlabhanārāyana

nṛpavara anupāma

tāhāna rājyata

rudra sarasvatī

devayānī kanyā nāma

tāhāna tanaya

hema sarasvatī

druvara anuja bhāi padabandhe tehō pracāra karilā

vāmana purāņa cāi48

Hema Sarasvatī is considered a contemporary of Durlabhanārā-yaṇa of the late thirteenth or early fourteenth century. There is however a difficulty in rendering the meaning of the second and third feet of the above verses. We think these may reasonably be translated as: "In his kingdom (lived) Rudra Sarasvatī. Deva-yānī is his (Rudra Sarasvatī's) daughter. Her son is Hema Sarasvatī, who is the younger brother of Dhruva." Here Rudra Sarasvatī may be really Durlabhanārāyaṇa's contemporary or may thus be considered at least by a generation later than king Durlabhanārāyaṇa and the poet Harivara Vipra, in which case he may be a junior contemporary of the poet Kaviratna Sarasvatī, whose father acted as a Sikdār during Durlabhanārāyaṇa's reign. It is further supposed that Hema Sarasvatī is a Brāhmaṇa, which has no particular evidence as Sarasvatī like Bhāratī or Kandali seems to be a general epithet for scholars. In an old Assamese chronicle ^{48.} Prahlāda-caritra, ed. by Kaliram Medhi, 1835 Saka, p. 11.

^{49.} See ante.

^{50.} See ultra.

^{51.} Kaviratna Sarasvatī, for example, was a Kāyastha. The Kāyastha Janārdana, grandfather of Sańkaradeva's chief apostle Mādhavadeva, also bears the title of Sarasvatī (Nagendra-nath Vasu. The Social History of Kamarupa, vol. II, Calcutta, 1926, appendix l, p. 17). The occurrence of the suffix 'Sarasvati' after personal names is remarkable. It is, we may remember, one of the ten titles of the Daśanāmīs or the ten orders of Śańkarite sańnyāsis: Sarasvatī, Bhāratī, Purī, Giri, Tirtha, etc. (The Three Great Acharyas, Madras, 1947, pp. 58 f.). It is interesting to note that Śrīpati Sarasvatī, a Kāyastha Bhūyā of Kāmarūpa, was originally an anchorite attached to the Govardhana-matha of Śańkarācārya (Kāyastha Samājar Itivṛtta, 1941, p. 490) It is not known if Hema Sarasvatī and Kaviratna Sarasvatī or their ancestors had anything to do with any Śańkarite monastery.

the king of Kamatā (not named) is mentioned to have sent in 1401 Šaka | 1479 A.D. a messenger, Rāmadeu Bhaṭṭācāryya, who was the son ôf Rudra Sarasvatī, to Gauḍa.⁵² But this Rudra Sarasvatī is apparently a different man from and later than Hema Sarasvatī's father or grandfather, who lived during Durlabhanārāyaṇa's reign, or even earlier. The latter part of the fourteenth century may however be assigned as Hema Sarasvatī's date. His vocables betray only a single Arabic loan (naphar). There also is only one instance of a pre-Sańkaradeva grammatical form (-iba-past participle: puribāra prabhāve adhike jale kānti).

Hema Sarasvatī takes the story of Prāhlāda, from the altercations between the demon Hiraņyakasipu and his son Prahlāda to the former's death, from Vāmana Purāṇa and relates it in his own way. Dan He is not a powerful story-teller and the treatment of details is not very attractive. His language and style are not of a high order and polish and lack utterly in idiomatic expressions. Rhyming also is not smooth in places. It is to be noted that he calls the scriptures of the Asuras vāmānaya (left-handed) and refers to mantras for control of elephants (hastīsādhā-mantra). The poet seems to be a Viṣṇuite: he salutes Viṣṇu-Nārāyaṇā and tells the story to celebrate the victory of the Vaiṣṇava Prahlāda over the followers of the vāmānaya cult. His work has been claimed as "the first Assamese book on Vaiṣṇavism". Sa

Hara-gaurī-samvāda.—A more considerable work of Hema Sarasvatī has recently been discovered in the district of Goalpara. It consists of six different chapters in 899 verses of more than 4,000 lines. The first chapter deals with the story of Hiranyakaśipu's death at the hands of Man-Lion Viṣṇu as recounted in Nṛṣimha Purāṇa, while the remaining five chapters are professedly taken from Hara-gaurī-samvāda. Chapters 2-5 relate the tales of demon Tāḍakā's warfare, the burning down of Kāmadeva with fire coming out of god Śiva's eye, and the birth of Kārtika; chapter 6 purports to give an account of the means and ends of yoga practices. In this poetical work Hema Sarasvatī tells us about himself in a slightly ^{52.} Assam Burañji, ed. by S. K. Bhuyan, D.H.A.S., 1945, p. 18.

⁵²a. The tale of Prahlāda as narrated by Hema Sarasvatī does not however appear in the printed original (Vāmana Purāṇa, Jagaddhitecchu Press, Bombay, 1808 Śakābdā; and the ed. of Tarkaratna, Cal., 1314 B.S. It is possible that there might have been another recension of the work current in Kāmarūpa at that time, ^{53.} Kaliram Medhi, Assamese Grammar and Origin of the Assamese Language, intro,, p. xcl.

varying way from Prāhlāda-caritra: He was one of the four sons of Durlabhanārāyaṇa's minister (mahāpātra), Paśupati, and his wife Rambhāvatī. The most prominent among the four brothers was Dhruva and Dhanañjaya was the eldest. The original name of the poet was Hemanta; he acquired the epithet of Hema Sarasvatī by virtue of constant worship of Hara and Gaurī. He used to live with his parents at Kamatā, Durlabha's capital, where goddess Kālī was enshrined.^{53a}

KAVIRATNA SARASVATĪ

Jayadratha-vadha.-In this work the poet writes:

King Durlabhanārāyaṇa was the crown jewel of all kings and a great worshipper of gods. He ruled over people on earth with constant affection as if for his own son. His son is the pious Indranārāyaṇadeva. A great hero, he is learned and is of dignified demeanour. He always worships god Hari. With the strength of his arms he has with ease conquered an undivided kingdom (lit., the whole of the globe). The antagonist kings constantly pay obeisance to him and serve him. Every moment Sadāśiva blesses Indranārāyaṇa with this boon: Let the king be Pañca-Gauḍeśvara, (lord of the five Gauḍas) and let him live long with his son.

There is a village called Choṭaśilā, which is the essence (chief) of all villages. There lived Cakrapāṇi Śikdār, famous all over the world, accomplished as a man, chief among the Kāyasthas, pious, well-reputed, great among scholars, and beautifying his race like a spotless moon. He worshipped gods and Brāhmaṇas and held religious councils. There were guests always staying at his place and they never returned ungratified. By dint of his own qualities he has acquired great wealth and honour. The chief among kings, Durlabhanārāyaṇa, was all praise for him. All people were deeply grieved at his death as if they themselves had died in war or the mount Meru had fallen down or a piece of ruby had been eaten into by insects.

His son Kaviratna Sarasvatī speaks these verses of Dronaparva, describing the killing of Jayadratha.⁵⁴

⁵³a. This book has recently been disinterred from oblivion by Srī Ajaychandra Chakravarti, Dhubri.

^{54.} Typical Selections from Assamese Literature, Vol. I, C. U., 1929, pp. 324-25.

Scholars have assigned, as we have already seen, the latter part of the thirteenth or the early part of the fourteenth century A.D. as the date of Durlabhanārāyaṇa's reign. Kanaklal Barua tentatively fixes 1350-65 as Indranārāyaṇa's period of rule. 55 It is seen from the pedigree of Rāmacaraṇa Thākura incorporated in The Social History of Kāmarūpa, Vol. III, 1933, that Kaviratna Sarasvatī was sixth in order of ascent from Rāmadāsa Ātā, a disciple of Sankaradeva: Cakrapāni (Kāśyapa-gotra)—Kaviratna Sarasvatī, alias Śrīhari Sarasvatī—Haripāla Bhūyā—Rāmapāla Bhūyā—Jayapāla Bhūyā—Kṛṣṇapāla or Gopāla Bhūyā—Kṛpāla Bhūyā—Gayapāla or Gayapāṇi Bhūyā, alias Rāmadāsa Ātā—Rāmacaraṇa Thākura.

Chotasilă is probably Silā, a village in the Barpeță subdivision in the Kāmrūp district. This work is more an adaptation than a literal translation of the Mahābhārata. His language and diction are simple but inferior to and less idiomatic than that of Mādhava Kandali and Harivara Vipra. His descriptions are detailed and minute (e.g. the picture of Kailāsa quoted in the Typical Selections from Assamese Literature, Vol. I).

RUDRA KANDALI

Sātyaki-praveśa.—In his work Rudra Kandali praises Śrīmanta Tāmradhvaja and his younger brother, who were like Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa in the matter of fraternal affection. Tāmradhavāja is here described as wise, pious and very kind, a protector of the poor and a devotee of Viṣṇu and worshipper of Māhāmāyā. The biographies of saint Śaṅkaradeva describe how king Durlabhanārāyaṇa of Kamatā or Kāmarūpa had a war and concluded a treaty with king Dharmanārāyaṇa of Gauḍa. One biographer however calls Durlabhanārāyaṇa king of Gauḍa with his capital at a place called Gariyā at a distance of three praharas from Behār (Cooch Behar) and the Kāmarūpa king is, according to him, his cousin Dharmapāla by name. This is apparently a mistake. This biographer however gives Tāmradhvaja as the name of the Kāmarūpa king's son and says that when the king returned home by boat up the Brahmaputra, he was affectionately received by Tāmradhvaja at the landing place. ⁵⁸ But the expression ghara-ghaţe, 'at his own bathing or landing place' (variantly, baḍa ghāţe) is taken by Kanaklal Barua to mean "his headquarters in Ghoraghat in Rangpur". ⁵⁹ Thus Tāmradhvaja was a king of Kamatā-Kāma-rūpa following Durlabhanārāyana but it is not clear where his capital might have been. The pre-Sankaradeva characteristic of past participle in -iba- is in evidence in Sātyaki-praveśa:

^{55.} Early History of Kamarupa, p. 25.

^{56.} Kaliram Medhi, Assamese Grammar and Origin of the Assamese Language, into p. xci.

^{57.} Rāmacarana Thākura, Sankara-carita, ed Halirām Mahanta, 1925, p. 198.

dunāi dhanu chedibāra bege ye laḍilā, tini śare bhedibāra ātāseka dilā, yudibāra śarapāṭa ānaka māriyā,60

Sātyaki-praveśa is a section (chs. 105-ff) of the sub-parva "Jayadratha-vadha" included in the Dronaparva of the Mahābhārata. This section celebrates the prowess of Satyaki, son of Sini of the Yadu race. The translation is generally faithful to the original. In describing the fights between hero and hero, Rudra Kandali sometimes makes a long story short (e.g., between Sătyaki and the Trigartas), a short one long (e.g., between Drona and Dhrstadyumna); he sometimes dilates too long upon some description with much freedom from his original (e.g., in that of the fight between Drona and Brhatksetra) or keeps quite close to the Sanskrit Mahābhārata (e.g., description of fight between Duhśāsana and Sātyaki). The descriptions on the whole are very much lively. The derisive words of the Cedi, Srnjaya and Somaka soldiers hurled at Drona (Dronaparva, 109. 51-60) are replaced by Rudra Kandali's homely rebukes in the homely language of common people, which is much palatable to ordinary readers and listeners. Similes and homely expressions are a constant and pleasant feature of the language of this work. Kandali retains original similes as such; or alters and simplifies them, or drops them if found too abstruse for general apprenhension. He also makes out ones from his own observation or from convention.

B

CHORAL SONGS: OJĀ-PĀLI

INTRODUCTION

The lyrical Kavyas in choral songs represent the most popular form of literature before neo-Vaisnava influences pervaded the ^{58.} op. cit., p. 7.

^{59.} Early History of Kamarupa, p. 246.

^{60.} Typical Selections from Assamese Literature, vol. I, pp. 137 f.

literature of the country. In point of time these belong to the time of Sankaradeva but in essence and methods of treatment they swing back to the preceding period. They can be called a direct outcome and the main article for consumption of the semi-religious institution of ojā-pāli. The lyrical Kāvyas were invariably meant to be sung by such a village chorus consisting of a band of singers of four or five. The leader of the chorus is called ojā or ojhā (Skt. upādhyāya), the few other singers are known as pālis, 'assistants, supporters' (Skt. pālita). There is a chief among these pālis who goes by the name of dāinā pāli (dāinā = Skt. dakṣiṇa). He is in fact the right-hand man of the ojā and is like a second leader of the chorus. It is the business of the ojā to lead the chorus: He sets the refrain for the palis to repeat with marking of time with their feet and striking of cymbals with their hands, and sings the main body of verses of the Kavya. He also makes dancing movements with gestures in his hands. addresses his audience as a story-teller does and explains to them the different incidents wherever he finds such explanations necessary. This is sometimes done by the daina pali, with whom the ojā occasionally holds a conversation. This institution of the ojāpāli was the direct precursor of the Vaisnava drama in the same way as the holy chorus in the festivals of Dionysus preceded Greek tragedy. When there was no regular drama in the country, the performances of the ojā-pāli provided the common people of villages and court circles with edification and amusement in the natghar (house of lyrical dance-drama). But even when anka or nāt, the regular drama invented by Śańkaradeva, came into existence, this musical institution did not cease to have its utility. It came to be known as the special property pertaining to the festival of the snake-godling Manasa but the neo-Vaisnavites also made use of the art in singing from Kirtana-ghosā of Śańkaradeva and verse tales from the Rāmāyana and the Mahābhārata,

The particular form of Kāvya—a number of lyrics with intervening payāras of the ordinary cast—is one of the distinct features of the age under review. Mankara, Durgāvara and Pītāmbara, all wrote in this form. But it was never practised by the Vaiṣṇava poets. Nārāyaṇadeva, coming several decades later than this trio, composed his Padmā Purāṇa in the form of a lyrical Kāvya but this was warranted by his very subject-matter. Another later work Aśvamedhaparva by Gaṅgādasa, Subuddhirāya and Bhavānīdāsa conforms to this type, but the three poets do not seem to have any affiliation to the Vaiṣṇava tenets. But for some reason or other this art was looked down upon by the neo-Vaisṇavites.⁶¹

This class of poetry has been called pāñcāli (lī) or pācali (lī) in the text at places.⁶²

As noticed above these Kāvyas have a considerable number of lyrics incorporated into them. These lyrics are set to certain melodies (rāgas) of classical Indian music. In his Uṣā-Parinaya Pītāmbara names these rāgas: ahira, barāḍi, bhairavī, bhā-thiyāli, dhanaśrī, goṇḍagiri, guñjarī, mallāra, nāga, nāṭa, pāhāḍī, paṭamañjarī, rāmagiri, sūhāi, vasanta, (variantly also vibhāsa). Rāgas used in Durgāvara's Rāmāyana are: ahira, ūkāśamaṇḍalī, barāḍi, belovāra, bhāthiyāli, cālani, devajini, devamohana, dhanśrī, guñjarī, mālaci, mañjarī, mārovāra, meghamaṇḍala paṭamañjarī, rāmagiri, śrīgandhakāli, śrīgāndhāra, sūyāi (sūhāi), vasanta.

It is to be noted that while the story of Manasā and Cānda Sāud is taken from no Sanskrit source, Durgāvara tells the story of Rāma, basing it mainly on the earlier work of Mādhava Kandali, and Pītāmbara takes the contents of his works direct from Harivaniśa and the Purāṇas. The works of Pītāmbara could thus have been classed with translations and adaptations but for their lyrical and popular nature and similarity in technique with the latter group. These lyrical Kāvyas generally centre round stories of love and marriage of young men and women.

PĪTĀMBARA KAVI

Pītāmbara was a man of Kāmarūpa living in the town of Kamatā, was a contemporary, perhaps a senior one, of Śaṅkaradeva and he composed some of his poetical works at the instance of prince Samarasimha of Koc Behār. This is practically all that has been known of this poet, Śaṅkaradeva left the Āhom

- Uṣā-pariṇaya, ed. by Maheswar Neog, Gauhati, 1951, intro., pp. xvii-xviii.
- 62. The word pāñcāli (lī) or pācāli (lī) derives itself from Skt. pāñcālī or pāñcālika, 'a doll'. And it is quite probable that this form of poetry was connected with the ancient amusement of puppet-play, especially popular in the countryside. Another suggestion is that the form originated in the Paūcāla country (Kanauj). In the Kālikā Purāṇa, 89 138-139, it is enjoined that Candikā should be propitiated on the third day of the moon, directly linked with the Puṣya-nakṣatra, with pāncālikā-vihāra and šišu-kautuka, 'children games'. It is likely that the term pāñcālikā-vihāra here denotes puppet-play or singing of pāncāli-kāvyas. Thus connected with Saktism and being a sort of light amusement, the pāñcālis came to be looked with suspicion by the Vaiṣṇavites.

territory and came to Koc Behār-cum-Kāmarūpa in about 1546 A.D. and stayed at Barpeṭā. He asked his new disciple Nārā-yaṇa Ṭhākura, a man of Kāmarūpa, to point out to him some influential persons of that region who could work as proselytizers. Nārā-yaṇa named three such persons one of whom was Pītambara Kavī, who had already rendered Bhāgavata Purāṇa, X, into verse. San-karadeva then wanted to know what poetry Pītāmbara was making. Nārāyaṇa recited a portion from Pītāmbara's work, describing how Rukmiṇī, the princess of Kuṇḍinanagara, was eager to see Kṛṣṇa, in course of which appeared the couplet:

bilāpa kari kānde māi rukamīņī kona ange khuņa dekhi nāila yadumaņi

Sankaradeva remarked that this poet was a Sākta and had an inordinate love for the sensuous, and that he was not fit to hold the position of a preacher as he sat on the hill of vanity (garva parvatata siţo uṭhiyā āchay). It would appear that Pītāmbara had an established reputation as a poet when Sankaradeva entered the kingdom of Kāmarūpa, that is, before the middle of the sixteenth century. Besides Bhāgavata Purāṇa, X, four other works are ascribed to him: Bhāgavata Purāṇa, I, Uṣā-pariṇaya and Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa (Caṇḍī-ākhyāna) and Nala-damayantī. Nothing has so far been known of Pītāmbara's Bhāgavata Purāṇa, I, a copy of which was at one time preserved in the Cooch Behar State Library. Manuscript copies of Bhāvagata Purāṇa, X, and Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa (Caṇḍīākhyāna) are still preserved in the same place.

Khan Choudhury Amanatullah Ahmed and, after him, Dr. Shashi Bhusan Das Gupta of Calcutta University, consider the poet Pitāmbara as identical with the great scholar of the Cooch-Behar court, Pītāmbara Siddhāntavāgiša. This scholar is reputed 64. Kathā-gurucarita, ed. by U. C. Lekharu, p. 95-f.

^{63.} Maheswar Neog, Śri-śri-śańkaradeva, ed. 2, p. 123.

^{65.} Khan Choudhury Amanatulla Ahmed, Kocbihārer Itihās, I, p. 131-n. 66. S. B. Das Gupta, ed., Descriptive Catalogue of Bengali Manuscripts, In the State Library of Cooch Behār, 1948, pp. 7-8, 11-12, 62-64; S. B. Das Gupta: 'Ṣodaśa śatābdir ek-khāni Bamlā Bhāgavat', Visvabhārati, Patrikā, Vol. V, 1354 B. S., pp. 254-ff. Dr. Das Gupta has mistaken Pītāmbara to be a Bengali poet. His statement has been examined by the present writer in a current Assamese periodical, Rāmdhenu, Vol. III, No. vii.

to have compiled eighteen Smrti works called Kaumudis, three of which (Preta-kaumudi, Samkranti-kaumudi and Sandhya-kaumudi) have already been printed and published. The Siddhantavagisa became known as 'Jagadguru'. His descendants still live in a small village named Sarābādi in the west of the Mangaldai subdivision. A man of this family, Süryyadeva, composed a chronicle of the Koc Kings, Gandharvanārāyanar Vamsāvalī, in the middle of nineteenth century.67 According to this chronicle68 the two scholars of King Naranārāyaņa's court, Pītāmbara Siddhāntavāgīśa and Purusottama Vidyāvāgīśa were formerly in the court of Gauda and were brought into Kāmarūpa by the king's younger brother, chief minister and commander-in-chief Sukladhvaja or Cilārāya. In Samudranārāyaņar Vamsāvalī, Pītāmbara is described as Pratāpa Bhūyā's guru.69 In none of his poetical works Pītāmbara Kavi gives us any indication that he was a Siddhāntavāgīśa or that he had migrated from Gauda; on the other hand, he rests content to call himself a poet of Kāmatā or Kāmatāpura :

kāmātānagare surapurī parateka tāte šišu pītāmbara nāme kavi eka70 kāmatānagara surapura-avatāra ekamukhe ke kahiba yena guna tara tāta pītāmbara nāme kavi šišumati uşāpariņaya gīta kaila samāpati71

Now Pītāmbara Siddhāntavāgīśa was taken by Śukladhvaja from Gauda after his captivity there (for twelve months according to Assam chronicles and Dr. Wade⁷²), which was the result of his unsuccessful campaign against that country. He undertook this campaign after return from the Ahom kingdom in 1563; and after his return from Gauda he had the Kāmākhyā temple rebuilt in 1565 as recorded in the inscription on its inside wall. It is therefore clear that Pītāmbara Siddhāntavagīša came to Kāmārūpa in 1564 or 1565.72a But the poet Pîtāmbara Dvija composed his Uṣā-

67. Amanatullah Ahmed, ibid.

68. Ff. 16, 83 cited by A. Ahmed, pp. 114, 114-n.

69. Amanatullah Ahmed, p. 114-n.

70. Usā-parinaya, v. 1, p. 2.

71. Ibid. v. 1369, p. 243.

72. Assam Burañji, D. H. A. S., 1945, p. 42; J. P. Wade, An Account of Assum, 1927, p. 204.

72a. In the genealogical history of a Baruva family of Mangaldai subdivision, claiming the Siddhārtavāgiśa as kula-guru, the pandit is said to have been brought from 'the Badshah circle' in 1483 Saka, 1561-62 A.D. (Köyastha Samājar Itivrtta, pp. 803-f.).

pariņaya in Kamatāpura eulogising the town as a place of gods incarnate in 1533 A.D. (or 1455 of Saka era). The poet is thus distinct from the Smṛti scholar of the same name. That poet Pitāmbara also was a good Sanskrit scholar has been put beyond all doubt by the elegant way of his work of translation and adaptation from the Purāṇas. It seems also to be quite possible that Pitāmbara was not a 'dvija' but a 'dāsa' or non-'dvija'.

ASPECTS OF EARLY ASSAMESE LITERATURE

5601

Uṣā-pariṇaya.—This Kāvya was completed on the fifth day of the month of Vaiśākha of the year 1455 of the Śaka era (vāṇa-yuta-vāṇa-veda-śaśānka-pramita) or 1533 A.D. in the town of Kamatā. This is the eariest of Pītāmbara's works now available. In it the name of 'yuvarāja (prince) Samarasimha (Śukladhvaja) '73 is not mentioned as is done in the two other works considered below. It was in 1455 Śaka that Naranārāyaṇa became king and appointed his brother Śukladhvaja as Yuvarāja (and virtually the chief minister and commander-in-chief of his army). So, though Pītāmbara lived in the capital, he did not possibly till that time secure the patronage of any royal personage. Kamatā, Kāmatā, Kāntanagara is said to have been established by King Niladhvaja of 72b. This has been pointed out to me by Dr. Sukumar Sen of Calcutta University. In Nala-damayanti, written 1544-45 A.D., a MS of which was collected by Dr. Sen from the Rangpur district, Pitambara persistently subscribes himself as 'Dāsa' (Sen, Bāngālā Sāhityer Itihās, vol. I, 2nd ed., pp. 231f., 336f). In one place only in Usā-parinaya (v. 136fi., p. 242) Pītāmbara says:

hena punyamaya kathā brāhmaņe kahilā payāra prabandhe tāka recanā karilā pracura kateka kathā racilo samksepe āra kathā dilo tāta rasa anurūpe

This statement is confusing enough as the verbs kahilā, karilā connected with the subject brāhmana in the first two lines are in the third person, while in the following lines the verbs racilo, dilo clearly indicate the first person. This juxtaposition of verbs of two different persons rouses the suspicion that the subject of the first two verbs is different from the subject of the latter ones (namely, the author). We have not moreover been able to verify the text of these lines, which occur in an uncritical edition, ed. Nibhārsārām Chaudhārī, from any complete MS. In Typical Selections from Assamese Literature, vol. II, pt. II, C.U., 1924, p. 321, the third and fourth lines quoted above are found wanting. Dr. Sen would suggest: Pitāmbara by the above statement means that the story he tells was recounted to him by a Brāhmana (i.e., he heard it from Kathakas).

73. See ultra.

ASSAMESE LITERATURE BEFORE ŚANKARADEVA 51

Khen or Khyān family and was later taken by Visvasimha as the capital of the Koc kingdom which he established.⁷⁴

The story of Vāṇāsura's prowess, his fight with the Yādavas, the fight on his account between Kṛṣṇa and Hara, the 'love affair' and marriage of Uṣā (Vāṇa's daughter) and Aniruddha (Pradyumna's son) are told in the greatest detail in Harivamsa (Viṣṇuparva, chapters 116-128). Pītāmbara takes the story from there and for the most part keeps close to the original. He says:—

vyāsara mukhara kathā ānibo āwase ārasava racibo tāhāra āśe-pāśe.

He takes a great deal of liberty with the description of Uşa's alluring youthful beauty; the erotic pleasures of Hara and Pārvatī in the arbour (which reminds us of Mankara's like description); the desperation that grows at its sight in the heart of Uṣā whose fancy was already 'lightly turning to thoughts of love' for influence of the springtime; Aniruddha's sexual pleasures with the Yakşiņī Kāmasenā in a dream and Uṣā's erotic dream and attainment to puberty. As a matter of fact, there are fine touches of lyricism and sensuousness in the first portions of the Kavya and Usa becomes the central figure of the action in place of Vana as in the Harivamsa. element of lyricism finding an expression in small lyrics is however gradually lost in the clash and thunder of arms as the action progresses and the character of Usa almost dwindles into the background. Love and marriage are the theme; the fall of Vana comes as a byproduct of the action moving towards that consummation. However with his heroism and devotion to Hara the demon king remains an attractive and brilliant character till the last. With an eye on popularity Pītāmbara brings in the character of Uṣā's old nurse, Kokilā. This woman warns Vāņa just after Uṣā's birth that the child will be his ruin and should be therefore thrown into water as all ill omens have appeared round about the palace in the wake of its birth. She later on reports Uşa's clandestine union with Aniruddha to Vana, adding that her prediction is coming true. There are other elements in the work which cater to the taste of the populace - a play of the supernatural in the main. Some glimpses of the social conditions of the times are seen in references to the worship of Gauri and Siva and a passing description of ceremonial marriage.

^{74.} Gait. The Koch Kings of Kamarupa, 1895, p. 15.

Bhāgavata Purāṇa, X.—No date of composition is mentioned in the body of the work. Pītāmbara however says:

Kāmatānagara is a wonderful city, where lives the great king Viśvasińha. His son is Samarasińha by name, who derives much pleasure from the divine sports of Kṛṣṇa. His devotion constantly rests at the lotus feet of Kṛṣṇa. Pītāmbara with but a child's intellect, (living) near him made these verses, celebrating the activities of Kṛṣṇa.

In other places Samarasimha is called 'Yuvarāja' which unmistakably refers to Sukladhvaja, better known as Cilaraya, In Darrang Raj Vamsabali,76 it is stated that during the coronation ceremony of Malladeva or Naranārāyana in Behār (Cooch Behar) Sukladhvaja was made yuva-nṛpati (= yuvarāja, 'young king') and was given the name (epithet) Samgramasimha possibly in recognition of his military skill. He is referred to as chota raja all through Kathā-gurucarita. Pītāmbara uses the word Samarasimha as a variant of 'Samgramasimha'. That Sukladhyaja was a great devotee of Kṛṣṇa is seen from the fact that he was later initiated into Vaisnavism by Śankaradeva. The date of Naranārāyana's accession to the throne is placed by Gait at about 1540 A.D., by Amanatulla Ahmed at about 1455 of Saka era, that is, 1533 A.D. So, 1533 can be taken as the upper limit in determining the date of composition of Pitambara's Bhagavata Purana, X. As for the lower one it cannot, I think, go beyond about 1546 A.D. when Sankaradeva heard some of its verses recited from memory by Narayana Thakura. On the whole, the work belongs to the first half of the sixteenth century.

It has already been noted how Pitāmbara was censured by Sankaradeva on account of the note of sensuality obtaining in his verse rendering of Bhāgavata Purāṇa. His work is more an adaptation than translation from the original Purāṇa. He is a storyteller, narrating episodes from Bhāgavata Purāṇa in a pleasing manner.

^{75.} Bhāgavata, X, MS, Cooch Behar State Library, folio 1, cited in the Viśvabhāratī Patrikā, V, iv, p. 256.

^{76.} ed. by Hemchandra Goswami, 1817, v. 313. In Assam Burañji, D.H.A.S., 1945, p. 43, it is stated that Cilaraya got the epithet Samgramasimha after his clever escape from Gauda.

Mārkandeya Purāna (Candī-ākhyāna).-This work also was composed by Pītāmbara at the instance of Kumāra Samarasimha or Sukladhvaja. But this time the patron prince is complimented as a great devotee of Bhavani, and the poet himself makes a crore of salutes to the goddess in the initial benedictory verses. Pītāmbara indicates how Sukladhvaja one day expressed regret in the royal court that none but scholars could understand what was in the Purānas as it was garbed in Sanskrit, and how the prince asked the poet to render it into verses in the language of the land.77 In the two manuscripts preserved in the State Library of Cooch Behar, the date of beginning the work of composition is given as 1524 Śaka (veda pakṣa vāṇa āra śaśānka śakat) or 1602 A.D.; but the date seems to be improbable in view of the facts that Sukladhvaja died in 1492 Saka or 1571 A.D. and that Pītāmbara's first extant work Uşā-parinaya was written as far back as 1533 A.D. It is quite likely that there might be a scribal mistake in the above reading and it would be reasonable to suppose this work to have been written not much later than the date of Naranārāyāna's coming to the throne as Pitambara here calls Sukladdhvaja both 'Kumāra' and 'Samarasimha'.

In this version Pitambara gives in simple and direct language the story of goddess Candi and her fight with and victory over several demons.

Pītāmbara is one of the most considerable poets of the age. Probably next to Mādhava Kandali he is the most prolific of the pre-Śańkaradeva writers. A scholar of great merit, he is a poet and musician of no mean degree.

DURGĀVARA KĀYASTHA

Gīti-rāmāyaṇa.—The recension of Durgāvara's Gīti-rāmāyaṇa at present available⁷⁸ seems to be incomplete. Nothing can be gathered from it about the identity of the poet. Another work ascribed to him, Padmā or Manasā Purāṇa, however provides a few points of detail. He pays his homage there to king Viśvasinha, 'the Master of Kamatā', his fortyeight queens and eighteen princely sons. The number of Viśvasimha's (king of Koc-Behār) wives remains unascertained; the princes however are taken to ^{77.} MS, folio 1, cited in Descriptive Catalogue of Bengali Manuscripts in the State Library of Cooch Behar, Art. No. 8.

Durgāvari | Kavivara Durgāvarā-racita Gīti-rāmāyana, ed. Visayacandra Visvāsī, Hajo, 1837 šaka. The work is now being re-edited by the present writer.

be eighteen or nineteen. The king died in C. 154078a and (as Durgāvara gives the full number of his sons) the poet must have composed his Padmā Purāņa by this date; while Gīti-rāmāyana may be an earlier work of his, as no patron is mentioned therein. Durgāvara calls himself the son of Śrī Kāyastha Candradhara. Another person, Bāhubala Śikdār, is eulogised and described as a Gandharva incarnate, a devotee of Padma (Padma-deukar), and one shining in the family as a malati flower shines among all flowers. The poet wishes this person a long life (āyu yaśa vrddhi hauka candra divākara). From this it may well be inferred that this musician and officer of state (Sikdar - a keeper of fort or town, or a revenue officer) was the poet's patron. It is possibly this Bahubala Sikdar who was later raised to the rank of a naval officer as Patra during the reign of king Naranārāyana, Viśvasimha's son. Durgāvara lived in the village of Nīlācala on the hill of that name, where 'resides the demon killer Parvatī (Kāmākhyā)'- āchaya pārvatī asurara ksayankāra. Viśvasimha is said to have discovered the yoni-pitha of Kāmākhyā in a deserted condition under cover of a thick jungle in the early years of the sixteenth century; and the worship there was carried on up till that time by some local tribal people with offerings of pigs and fowls. Coming to test and realise the miraculous power of the holy spot, he built a temple over it.78b Possibly Viśvasimha made arrangements for the worship of Manasa as he did see to the regular administering of the worship of Kāmākhyā. It has been one of the special festive occasions at the place.78c The name Durgāvara is apparently a Śākta one. In Manasā Purāņa the poet says that he was secured by his parents as a boon from all the gods:

> prati deva vare putra pāileka pradhāna kavi durgāvara gīta karilā vyākhyāna (verse 61).

Durgāvara seems also to be a common name for bhāṭas or wandering minstrels (kavi gāite āila rājār bhāṭ durgāvar⁷⁹). In Gīti-Rāmāyaṇa Durgāvara does not betray an inclination towards any particular religious form, although he pays his obeisance to Rāma, several times, in course of the gīti-kāvya. He likewise relies on the blessings of goddess Sarasvatī (verses 368, 372, 946) for the ⁷⁸a. See ante.

⁷⁸b. Amanatullah Ahmed, p. 94.

⁷⁸c. Maheswar Neog: 'Serpent-lore and serpent-worship in Assam', The Eastern Anthropologist, vol. IV, nos. 3-4, March-Aug., 1951, p. 158.
79. Gopicandrer Gan, C.U., vol. I, 1922, p. 57.

easy flow of his lyrics. Judged by the general trend of the present work and the indiscriminate use of words like sāranga, gāndīva, murāri, cakrapāni, daityāri, devarāja as applied to Rāma and his attributes, he can be taken as a village poet with not much of classical learning, or with no care to keep conformity to the conventions of scriptures. He has not also possibly seen the Ramayana in original Sanskrit and relies on Mādhava Kandali's Assamese version or on his own imagination.

In the version available, the Adi- and Avodhva- kandas are missing, while the Lanka- and Uttara-kandas are treated quite summarily. It is very much possible that the first two cantos have been lost in the march of centuries or not written at all: the Aranya-kanda begins with a mention of the Ayodhya-kanda:

> ayodhyā kāndara kathā bhaila samāpati aranya kandara katha suniyo samprati.

Regrettably enough, the five lyrics of the missing cantos have slipped out of public memory as well, and the present writer has been able to get hold of the following single one (incomplete) 80 from Durgāvara's Ayodhyā-kānda describing Rāma, Laksmana and Sītās' setting out for exile.

> mayo bane yaō svāmī (he) a svāmī nakarā nairāša tomāre lagate svāmī khātim banabāsa (he) opare sūruyar chatā tale tapta bāli (he rāma) kimate calibā sītā sukomala bhari (he) āge vāiba rāmacandra madhyata jānakī (he rāma) tāra pāche calī yāiba laksmana sārathi (he) dandakā banate āche sīmha byāghra ati (he rāma) kimate calibā sītā nārī bhīrumati (he).

I shall also go to the forest. O lord, O lord, disappoint me not, With thee, O lord, Shall I suffer exile.

(Rāma says:)

Up above is the burning sphere of the sun and heated sand below; how shalt thou walk on, O Sītā thou hast got but delicate feet.

(Sīta says:)

Rāmacandra will march first,

Jānakī in the middle,;

behind them will step out

Lakṣmaṇa, (our) main prop.

(Rāma says:)

There in the Dandaka forest abound lions and tigers; how shall thou go, O Sītā thou art but a timid lass. »

With all its original lyrical beauty Gīti-rāmāyaṇa is for the most part only a popular version of Mādhava Kandali's work, meant for the use of the ojā of ojā-pali chorus. The narration of the story is sometimes scrappy and disjointed; but then the gaps could be filled up by the ojā or dāinā-pālī. Some passages, especially in the payāra or ordinary verse portions, are identically the same as in Kandali. Durgāvara sometimes drops some lines from Kandali and sometimes adds to them. Some of Kandali's verses are set to tune (rāga) with the addition of musical quantities like e or he. Sometimes the metre is changed with some slight alteration in the wording or a new rhyming is introduced. In places there are minor changes effected, which however are not sufficient to hide the loans from view (e.g.).

rudhira-lepita vāņa bāja haiyā gailā—Durgāvara nīle dekhilanta bāli rājāra niryyāņa ājuriyā kādhilanta rāghavara vāņa—Kandali.

^{81.} e.g., vv. 603-19.

^{82.} e.g., vv. 587-92, 681-99.

^{83.} e.g., vv. 662ff.

The marvellous idiomatic expressions of Kandali are always found wanting in Durgāvara. While some archaic words like lagāibanti, karilanti are left in Durgāvara's work as a legacy from Kandali; others are substituted by new ones (e.g. pāsarilā, verse 674, in place of pālampilā).

In the Aranya-kanda, Durgavara describes the abduction of Sītā after relating a few episodes of his own invention: Sītā's offering pinda (food) to the deceased Dasaratha; Sītā's cursing the Moon, the Sun, the Air, the Earth, the river Phalgu and the Brahmaņas for false deposition before Rāma; Rāma and Sītā's playing at dice; creation of Ayodhyā in the forest with the help of magic; and the Ayodhya people's performance of the Caitra-caturdasi festival. There are in the telling of the story other minor deviations from the original Sanskrit and Mādhava Kandali's rendering. The meeting of Ravana and the bird Suparsva after the abduction of Sītā is not found in Kandali and is introduced by Durgāvara. The lyricist moreover makes Sürpanakhā appear with her diabolically enchanting beauty before Rāma and Laksmana on the Citrakūta hill on the bank of the Candrabhāgā in place of in Pañcavațī hermitage in the forest of Dandaka. In Kandali Sürpanakhā's nose and ears are cut off by Laksmana when she rushes at Sita seeking to devour her, but in Durgavara Laksmana does this as soon as that demon beauty approaches him for love or lust. Kandali, Sûrpanakhā, with her nose and ears lopped off, runs to the demons Khara and Düsana and after their death at the hands of Rāma and Laksmaņa to Rāvaņa. Durgāvara's Sūrpanakhā goes straight to Rāvaṇa, who then summons Khara, Dūsaṇa and Triśiras to fight with the two men. Mārīca's suggestion of the way to take away Sītā, her having to remain within a marked-out circle, her calling Ravana father just in order to escape from his evil design on her, Rama and Laksmana's asking a heron of the whereabouts of Sītā, etc. are other points of divergence from Kandali's Rāmāyana. Thus in the Aranya-kanda which on the whole covers more than half the Kāvya Durgāvara steers much clear of Kandali's influences in language, contents and method of treatment of the subject and proceeds with the story in an independent manner. But this is not the case with the other cantos.

The Kişkindhyā-kāṇḍa of Durgāvara relates how Rāma contracted friendship with five monkey chiefs, Sugrīva, Hanūmān and others, and how he killed the monkey king Bāli in an unfair way. Durgāvara's verses differ not much from Kandali. His Sundarākāṇḍa looks like a summary of Kandali's account. He keeps close to the greater poet even where he reproduces the story in his own language. The Lankā-kānda is dealt with summarily in a few verses; Durgāvara is a lyricist singing of the more delicate emotions of the human heart and the description of war does not seem to be his forte. He is again in his own when he comes to the fire ordeal of Sītā and finds an appropriate subject for his treatment. He again takes to lyricising Kandali. In the words of Sītā's reply to Rāma's announcement of the harsh decision to throw her away³⁴ Kandali's sweeping lines are shortened into a crisp metre to echo Sītā's tense emotions. Durgāvara then skips over the appearance of Dāsaratha's spirit and comes to Rāma's coronation in Ayodhyā with which concludes this handy version of the Rāmāyaṇa.

There is always an attempt at abridging the Kavya (samksepe racila gita kavi durgavara).85 But the poet's imagination freely revels in the pathetic portions of the story and the thought of minimising is then set aside. Especially in the Aranya-kanda he takes a great amount of freedom in the treatment of the subject, the construction and sequence of events in the plot. There he appears in the true colours of a village minstrel, who has to appeal to the sentiment of common village folk with high-pitched pathos rather than with high-strung logic or philosophy or soaring imagination. No philosophical interpretation is therefore given to the action of Rāma, an incarnation of the supreme Godhead. Rāma is an ordinary human being, swept away at all times by human weakness and failings. Miracles are always a part of story-telling as is the case here, but Rama does not cease to be a weak man all the same. When he misses her in the sylvan cottage, he suspects her character, even though momentarily as a passing thought, as of a common unchaste woman. Even the much obedient and self-sacrificing Laksmana does not escape his suspicion. He is all beside himself and bewails like a mad man or a child. He asks the heron and the peepul tree of Sītā's news, flies into anger and gets ready to kill Jatāyu, wants to destroy the celestial worlds at the heron's words, mistakes the night for the day. He even thinks of poisoning himself to death and goes into a swoon. The divine in him is, as it were, temporarily in abeyance. Durgāvara's Rāma even casts a longing lingering look behind at his lost kingdom, and later, when he brings Sītā safe from Lanka, he says that he did this not for getting her back into his bosom, but to escape slur on his valour.86 Sītā's heart-broken reply to this is:

^{84.} vv. 916 et seq.

^{85,} v. 905.

^{86.} vv. 906ff.

itara nārīra sama dekhilā naţara naţunī yena anyajane dilā

Durgāvara works up some delicately sensuous touches when Rāma is reminded of his associations with Sītā by the humming black-bees⁸⁷ and the fair banks of Campā-sarovara bedecked with all the flowers.⁸⁸

A local custom of those days is in evidence when after the creation of a magic Ayodhyā, Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa and Sītā perform the Caitra-caturdaśī festival, in the company of the citizens of Ayodhyā.⁸⁹ The performance is described as follows:

Rāma was very happy and put on various apparels and flowers. He placed mādhavī flowers on his head. He looked charming with these and scented himself with aguru and candana. He placed on his body such ornaments as kankana, keyūra, chains and tinkling ballets. Lakṣmaṇa and Sītā also dressed themselves beautifully. With all this luxury their minds were charmed by Madana (Cupid). Śrīrāma, Lakṣmaṇa, Sītā and the Ayodhyā people took pitchers in their hands. They began to play the Caitra caturdasī and went round and round.

The Caitra Caturdaśi festival is performed in honour of the god of love, Madana or Kāmadeva at the fourteenth night of the bright half of the month of Caitra. About ten miles to the north of Gauhati is the venue of a massive temple now in ruins, dedicated to that god, on a small hill. The god with the consort Rati is still worshipped there under a small shed. This worship is a branch of the Siva-śakti cult and seems to have been widely carried on in the days of Durgāvara. A later description of the worship of Kāmadeva, is found in Tripurā Burañjī (early 18th century). Durgāvara moreover mentions that at the time of the fire ordeal Sītā bowed to the Sun god with folded hands and worshipped Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Maheśa mentally. 90 Yoginī

^{87.} v. 374.

^{88.} vv. 487 et seq.

^{89.} vv. 54-62.

^{90.} v. 90.

Tantra^{30a} refers to the worship of this Hindu trinity on a lake called Bārānasī, seven dhanus to the east of lake Apunarbhava of Hājo on the Caitra Kāmatrayodaśī day. This seems to be a special reference to the contemporary vogue of worshipping the Sun. Belief in astrology was common in those days, and Durgāvara's Rāma believes that such a piece of ill luck as having to lose Sītā is the influence of some evil star.³¹ The evil influence of Saturn and the mildness of the Moon are also under reference.³²

Durgāvara excels as a writer of lyrics, most of which are of the pathetic sentiment. The sweet and plaintive ahira rāga seems to be the poet's favourite tune. The best lyrics in the Kāvya are deeply pathetic, and consist of the bewailings of Sītā, Rāma, Tārā and others. As in a true lyric the descriptions of the human body (Sūrpanakhā or Sītā) or an animal (golden deer) are put forth in a few suggestive lines, which give the idea of fine engravings of a cameo. The magic city of Ayodhyā and the Madana-Caturdašī festival are also painted with a few clear strokes. The description of the fight between Rāvaņa and Jaṭāyu is also remarkable for its power.

SONGS OF MANASA WORSHIP

In Assam Manasā, Vişahari, Padmāvatī, or Marai, is worshipped in the districts of Goalpara and Kamrup and the subdivision of Mangaldai. This serpent godling attracts her votaries from all classes of people from Brahmanas to the lowest in the social grade, Even Muhammedans can and do join ojā-pāli choruses to sing the songs of Manasa during her worship. It is not clear how and where the Manasa cult originated, but traces of serpent worship have been noted among different tribes of Assam, the Khāsis, the Meitheis (Manipuris), the Mishmis, the Hajangs and Rabhas. The story of Manasā and Śaiva merchant Candradhara, later converted to the cult of Manasa, seems only to indicate the history of late admission of a non-Aryan godling into the Hindu pantheon. She is worshipped during the four rainy months of the year, Asadha, Śrāvana, Bhādra and Aśvina. The poet Mankara lays down that she should be worshipped for four days in the month of Śrāvana (July-August). He also says that the goddess is to be placed on a ⁹⁰a. 2. 9. 50.

^{91.} v. 324.

^{92.} v. 400, also v. 513.

manca (altar) and worshipped day and night while the four rainy months continue. In her earthen image Nagas (serpents) constitute her seat; Nāgas are her costume and Nāgas form her tiara. She can be worshipped in an earthen pot with siju twigs (a kind of Euphorbia) put in it, with hundred-petalled lotuses. Singing of songs of the goddess and dancing of the deodhani (lit., woman of god) and, sometimes her male counterpart the deodhā forms an attractive feature of the performance, which generally continues for four days but sometimes for a longer period.90 There is a large mass of mantras in Assamese, the utterance of which is believed to have the efficacy of curing a man of snake-bite.

The following is a sketch of the story of Manasa as told by the Manasa poets:

One day the great god Siva saw a pair of Śrīphala fruits (Aegle marmelos) and much intoxicated with smoking of hemp, he imagined them to be the breasts of his young wife Candi, was sensually disturbed within, and released a quantity of semen on a lotus leaf. From that creative fluid on the lotus leaf sprang up a beautiful godling with four arms and three eyes. Born out of Siva's mental disturbance and on a lotus leaf, she came to be known as Manasā, Padmāvatī or Padmā. Vāsuki, the king of snakes endowed her with poison and provided her with Nagas as attendants. Hence her name Visahari and her association with snakes, Vāsuki sent her to her father Siva's place, where she had the misfortune of meeting her step-mother Candi, who out of petty jealousy gave her some blows and blinded one of her eyes with strokes of her bangles. Siva took compassion on the hapless child and gave her in marriage to sage Jaratkaru. The eccentric sage however deserted her on a very slight provocation. Before leaving, he thumped with his hands Padma's womb, as a result of which a child, Astika, was born to her.

Candradhara, the king and merchant of the rich Campakanagara, was a devout worshipper of Lord Siva. When he was away from home on a trade voyage, his wife Sanekā or Sonekā worshipped Manasa with a view to getting back her husband soon. Candi instigated the merchant against Manasa and gave him a gold stick to strike her antagonist with. Candradhara hastened home and threw away all the things of Manasa worship. Thus began the enmity between a goddess and a mortal man. Padmā had Candradhara's six sons and Śankha Ojā, the great physician of snake-bite, done to temporary death by Śiva's permission. The merchant's fourteen ships, loaded with the richest merchandise, were also sunk and kept under sea water. But Candradhara would not bend.

^{93.} M. Neog: 'Serpent-lore and serpent-worship in Assam', The Eastern Anthropologist, IV, 3 and 4, pp. 151-57.

Padmä got the souls of Uṣā and Aniruddha on loan from heaven for twelve years and had them born on earth as Beulä, daughter of king Sāhe or Chāhe of Ujani-rājya, and Lakhīndāra, the seventh son of Cānda Sāud. Padmā one day took the form of a Brāhmaṇa widow and found out an excuse with Beulā to curse the latter thus: "Thou shalt be a widow like myself on the night following thy marriage." Beulā was married in course of time to Lakhīndāra. In spite of their being confined within a house all wrought of iron, Lakhīndāra was bitten by the venomous snake Kāli or Kāliya at the accursed hour.

With the permission of Canda and Saneka, Beula started on her journey of quest for Lakhindara's soul on a raft floating down the sea. She took with her, her husband's dead body which melted away on the way. She reached the heavenly regions and performed a dance in the assembly of the gods. All the gods were much pleased and impressed and asked Padma to give back the danseuse her husband. Padma agreed to do this on condition that Canda would adore her. Beula returned home not only with Lakhindara but with his six elder brothers and Canda's fourteen ships full with cargo. Overcome with joy and the grace of Manasa, Candradhara at first consented to worship the goddess only with the left hand and with his face turned away from her. But when time came, he faced the deity and poured lotus flowers at her feet with both the hands joined together.

There are three chief Manasā poets, whose songs are sung at the time of worship—Mankara, Durgāvara and Sukavi Nārāyaṇadeva. Their verses are popularly known as Mankarī, Durgāvarī and Sukanānnī (Sukavinārāyaṇī) respectively. Nārāyaṇadeva belongs to later times and is believed to have been a court-poet of king Balinārāyaṇa alias Dharmanārāyaṇa of Darangī-rājya (early seventeenth century). The imposing name Padmā Purāṇa is applied to the works of all the three poets, although the writings do not conform to the accepted definition of a Purāṇa; nor are they written in the Sanskrit language like the literature of the name.

Mankara.-Mankara seems to be the first Assamese Manasa poet. In his benedictory verses he sings of king Jalpesvara and the king of Kamatā (kamatāir rājā bando rājā jalpeśvara) and of the people of the town of Jalpeśvara, a second Amaravati in wealth and splendour. There is a very small percentage of Persian words, like bāzār to be traced in his vocabulary. King Jalpeśvara was a king of Kāmarūpa; and his capital was Jalpeśvara, modern Jalpāiguri. He was a Saiva and built a temple to Siva, called Jalpesvara.95 In Skanda Purāna, Āvantya Khanda, ch. 66, there is the story of a Śaiva king Jalpa. Kālikā Purāņa, ch. 80, speaks of Jalpīša Šiva, to whose protection the Kṣatriyas, scared by Parasurāma, surrendered themselves.96 This Purana is a work of the tenth century A.D. If the temple and the presiding deity are considered as named after its founder, king Jalpesvara, he must be a very early king. The kingdom of Kāmatā with its capital Kamatāpura was established by Niladhvaja the first Khen or Khvan king, whose grandson Nilambara was overthrown by Hussain Shah in 1496, A.D. The name Kamata seems to have been used by the Koc kings of Koc Behar of the sixteenth century for their kingdom.97 There is a wonderfully striking similarity between Mankara's salutations to 'a hundred queens and eighteen princes' and Durgāvara's reference to Viśvasimha's 'forty-eight queens and eighteen princes '.98 This leads us to suspect that kamatāir rājā (king of Kamata) and rājā jalpeśvara (King of Jalpeśvara) is the same monarch who is none other than Viśvasimha, who was the master of the capital city Kamata-nagara and the region represented by modern Jalpäiguri district,99 So it will not perhaps be wide of the mark to take Mankara as a poet of Kamata (western Assam) of the early sixteenth century. His language is of a popular cast and represents the tongue of Goalpara and Kamrup at the first impact of Islamic languages. The marriage-rites as described by the poet conform to those of this region. Koc people (Koc-Kocani) are constantly under reference and there is the mention of a musical instrument gomānā, which is in general use among the Bodos. The poet seems to be a votary of Manasa; but he also bows to the gods Narayana, ^{95.} Gunabhiram Barua, Asam Buranji, 1900, p. 43.

^{96.} B. Kakati, The Mother Goddess Kamakhya, §§ 11-12.

^{97.} Gait, History of Assam, 2nd ed., pp. 42 ff.

^{98.} See ante.

^{99.} This would make Mankara and Durgāvara contemporary, which is not otherwise unlikely. Different sources differ on the point of the number of Viśvasińha's wives.

Brahmā, Gangā, Pārvatī, Kāmākhyā of Kāmarupa, and the Nāgas of Pātāla among others. He also pays his obeisance to the Lauhitya (Brahmaputra). There is a reference to the Buddha (bauddharūpa). Some words like kadam-tal, Dvārakāpurī, Vrndāvana, etc. point to the prevalence of the Kṛṣṇa-lore at the time. Mankara was a village poet and minstrel, singing his Manasa songs with little cymbals in his hands. His language is simple and direct; there is an easy flow of imagination and of music. The erotic element is somewhat prominent particularly in the description of the gandharva marriage of Hara and Gauri. A crude humour is in evidence when the wife of the hermit Hemanta attempts falsely to stage her giving birth to a child (Durga), actually found by the sage floating on sea waters in an iron pitcher, or when Siva is suspected of enjoying the illicit company of Koc women. Mankara deals with the following topics: cosmology, the origin of gods, upbringing of Gauri in the hermitage of sage Hemanta, her marriage with Siva, the birth of Padmavatī from Siva's semen but from no womb, the origin of the Manasa cult.

Durgāvara.— Durgāvara is a more cultured and dignified poet than Mankara. He is also the more skilled in the art of poesy. His songs are sung in Kāmākhyā by the ojā-pālī during the worship of Manasā. They are each set to a particular classical Indian rāga, which is indicated at the top. Durgāvara's description of action, of human form, and of natural scenery are powerful; there is a note of realism in them. The story of Beulā and Lakhīndāra constitutes his main subject-matter. 100 ^{100.} Bhāratchandra Das, Asamīyā Sāhityar Buranji, Manasā Sākhā, Gauhati, 1949. B. K. Barua and S. N. Sarma, ed., Mankari āru Durgāvari (Manasā songs of Mankara and Durgāvara), 1952.

SANKARADEVA: HIS POETICAL WORKS

BY

B. K. BARUA

SECTION I

LIFE OF SANKARADEVA

During the fourteenth and the fifteenth centuries India had seen an outburst in the fields of religion and society. A new religion was founded on the liberal doctrine of Bhakti as revealed in the Bhāgavata Purāņa. It was a progressive and democrative movement which laid emphasis on the unity of the Godhead, stood against excessive ritualism, preached a faith based on constant devotion. fought against caste prejudices and stressed on the equality of man. Several saints of great endowments appeared in various provinces to carry the gospels of the new faith to the masses by rendering the Sanskrit Puranas into regional languages. Of these saints, Rāmānanda, a Brāhmana of Allahabad, was the most impressive figure and occupied the first place in point of time (1400-1470 A.D.). He worshipped Rama and preached his doctrine in Hindi. Kabir (1440-1518 A.D.) was one of his chief disciples. Another eminent leader of the movement was Vallabhāchārya (1479-1531 A.D.) a Brāhmaņa of the Telugu country. He worshipped Kṛṣṇa and propagated his doctrine in the south. In Maharastra the religion of Bhakti was preached by Nămadeva (1400-1430 A.D.) who was a tailor by caste. In Bengal arose the notable saint Chaitanya (1485-1533 A.D.), born of a learned Brāhmaņa family of Nadia. In Assam appeared the many gifted Sankaradeva (1449-1569 A.D.), a Sūdra by caste, who shaped the religious, social, cultural, and literary life of the people of the province for ages to come.

At the time of Sankaradeva's appearance, Assam was politically divided into a number of independent principalities. The Chutiyas ruled over the easternmost region of the country while the south-east was under the Kachāris. West of the Chutiyas and of the Kachāris on the south were the domains of some petty chiefs called Bhuyas. To the extreme west was situated the kingdom of Kamata, which later on came to be known as Cooch Behar and was under the domination of the Koch kings. The rest of the Brahmaputra Valley was ruled by the Ahoms. Thus contending political forces worked to separate the Assamese people from one another. In such an age Sankaradeva became a cementing force; with an all-embracing faith and a common national language he carved out a way for the cultural, spiritual and linguistic growth of Assam. Patronage received from some of the rulers of these states greatly advanced the cause of the new faith and though primarily a religious movement it led on to manifold expressions in art and literature. The Koch rulers patronised scholars to translate the Mahā-bhārata and the Purāṇas. The Āhom kings also greatly encouraged literary activities and made it possible to create a new type of historical prose known as Burañjis.

Sankara was born (1449-1569) in a Bhuyā family at Ālipukhuri a place about sixteen miles from the present town of Nowgong, on the south bank of the Brahmaputra. The Bhuyās were at that time a very important people holding landed estates and enjoying other privileges from the king. Sankara's family was called the Siromani Bhuyā, being the chief among the Bhuyās. His father was Kusumbara. Sankara's mother died within three days of his birth, and he was brought up by his grandmother Khersūtī. When Sankara was twelve years old he was sent to a village school maintained by Mahendra Kandali, an erudite Sanskrit scholar.

The earlier years of Śańkara's life were spent in hard study and preparation. His scholarship in Sanskrit and knowledge of the scriptures were well revealed in the number of translations and adaptations he made in Assamese in the later years of his life. He compiled a work on Vaiṣṇavism in Sanskrit styled Bhakti Ratnā-kara, and also composed many Sanskrit verses that were incorporated in his plays. His imaginative power and extraordinary intellect were well displayed even in his school days. Just after learning his alphabet, Śańkara composed an exquisite poem made up of consonantal wordings without the addition of any vowel sounds except the first. During this period he also composed a little kāvya Hariścandra Upākhyāna.

Sankara completed his study at the age of twenty-two and came out a finished scholar. Soon after his return from school official responsibilities of managing the family estates fell upon his shoulder. Now he was also married to Süryavatī, a Kāyastha girl. Süryavatī died four years after her marriage leaving a girl. During this time Sankara lost his father. These two bereavements filled his youthful mind with overwhelming sorrow and he even contemplated renouncing the world. After giving his daughter in marriage, Sankara set out on a long and extensive pilgrimage (1541 A.D.). He was accompanied by about seventeen companions including his former Guru Mahendra Kandali. The detailed account of this pilgrimage has been recorded in the biographies of Sankaradeva, compiled by his disciples. He visited most of the sacred places and temples of northern and southern India. Among the important places and temples that he saw were Gaya, Puri, Vrindāvana, Mathurā, Dvārakā, Kāśi, Prayāga, Sītākuņda, Varāhakunda, Ayodhyā and Vadarikāśrama. At these holy places he came into contact with Vaisnavite teachers of various schools, and entered with them into many learned and theological discussions. The results of these discussions and the influences they exercised over his mind were reflected in the Vaisnavite movement which he subsequently started in Assam. After twelve years of such wandering through many sacred seminaries of Vaisnavite learning, Sankaradeva returned home a much-travelled man, acquiring firsthand knowledge of Vaisnavite theology, texts, mode of worship, and management of institutions.

Soon after his return, Sankara married again and removed his residence from Alipukhuri to a near-about village, Bardovā.¹ Now his mission of life took a definite shape; he started with fresh impetus and vigorous enthusiasm his religious movement for mass conversion. At Bardovā, he set up a Satra (monastery), erected a Namghara, village-hall for daily devotion, and a place for community singing and held there religious discourses. Around him, he collected a group of devout disciples, and held daily devotional recitations known as Nāma kīrtana. The religious activities of Sankaradeva however, did not end in teaching, preaching, and winning converts; in songs, poems and plays he created a popular Vaiṣṇavite literature in Assamese.

At the age of sixty-seven (1516 A.D.) Sankaradeva had to leave his ancestral residence at Bardovā owing to the occasional disturbances created by the neighbouring Kachāri king and his subjects. He therefrom removed to Gān-mau and then to Dhuvā-hāṭa, a place on the north bank of the Brahmaputra. For about fourteen years he resided at Dhuvāhāṭā, and his stay here was marked by two important incidents. The first was the conversion of a famous Śākta scholar Mādhava Deva, who later on became the greatest apostle and the most redoubtable exponent of the tenets of Sankara. The second incident relates to Sankaradeva's encounter with the Ahom king Suhummung. The Brahmanas accused Śańkara before the Ahom king of preaching an unorthodox religion and one not envisaged by the Vedas. The Ahom king summoned Sankara to argue with the Brahmanas of his court, Sankara defeated them and got off from the trial with credit, however, felt that his life would be unsafe in Ahom territory and so left the place. He then journeyed to Barpeta (1543 A.D.), a place in the present district of Kamrup, then under the Koch king of Cooch Behar. In Barpeta he laid the foundation of a Satra, erected a Namghara and began propagating his faith. He spent the remaining years of his life in Barpeta in comparative peace. The major portion of his writings namely the songs, dramas and kayyas were composed here. After three years (1546 A.D.) of stay in Barpeta, Śańkaradeva set out again on a pilgrimage at the old age of ninetyseven. He was accompanied by one hundred and twenty devotees. During this journey he met Chaitanya Deva at Puri, and contacted the grand-daughter of Kabir.

It should be noted that Sankaradeva did neither advocate a religion of extreme asceticism nor complete renunciation of family life. He realised that men and women have to live in the world and to pursue their professions. His religion is therefore more suited to the householders.

On return Sankara resumed his customary works of prayer, meditation and Nāma-kīrtana, and gave religious instructions to the people. During this period, he paid occasional visits to the court of the Koch king at Cooch Behar at the invitation of the king. He passed away at Cooch Behar in 1569 A.D. on one of such visits. 1a

SECTION II

POETRY

Besides producing far-reaching religious and social effects, the Sankarite movement gave a great impetus to the development of learning and literature in Assam. Sankaradeva, though a remarkable Sanskrit scholar, wrote mainly in Assamese, the living language of the people, with the aim of making the Sanskrit lore accessible to the uneducated masses. He himself composed a large number of texts, consisting of translations, commentaries, and original works to expound his creed. These writings had also their practical utility. They were constantly required for regulation of duties. His literary works may be divided into three classes, poetry, songs and drama.

 For fuller biographical account see B. Kakati's Sankaradeva, Madras, now included in From Chaitanya to Vivekananda. Sankaradeva drew inspiration chiefly from the Bhāgavata² which was described as the Sun amidst the Purāṇas comprising as it does the essence of Vedānta philosophy (Purāṇa sūrya mahā Bhāgavata Vedāntaro ito paramatattva). An early attempt was, therefore, made to translate the book into Assamese. It was really a very bold and extraordinary undertaking to render into a provincial language a venerable text written in the grand style of a classical tongue. In this connection it is interesting to note that Sankaradeva was accused before the Koch king Naranārāyaṇa by the Brāhmaṇas as he read, taught and translated the Bhāgavata.

The translation of the entire text was not a light job for one man; so Sankaradeva allotted different sections for translation to his different disciples. He himself undertook the rendering of the major portion, namely Books, I, II, III, VII, VIII, IX, X and Book XII.³

The rendering of the Bhāgavata marks an era of renaissance in Assamese poetry; its literary influence on Sankarite literature was manifold and immense and proved a shaping force upon Sankara's writings. Sankaradeva was not only indebted to the Bhāgavata for its Kṛṣṇāite legends but also for literary forms, expressions and traditions. Sankara translated the Bhāgavata not only into Assamese words, but into Assamese idioms. For example, take the following verses from the original:

- 2. A miraculous story is told by his biographers about Sankaradeva's coming across with the Bhāgavata Purāna. A Brāhmaņa pundit of Tirhut named Jagadiśa Miśra went to Puri to read out the Bhāgavata Purāna in the temple. In a dream, the Brāhmaņa received a mandate from Jagannātha to the effect that he should proceed to Kāmarūpa and read out the Bhāgavata to Sankaradeva. 'The Brāhmaṇa searched out Sankara at Bardovā and read out the book before him. When his mission of reading out all the twelve books of the Bhāgavata closed after a year the Brāhmaṇa died. It should, however, be noted that Sankaradeva began the translation of the Bhāgavata before meeting Jagadīśa Miśra. The Brāhmaṇa probably assisted him in solving some knotty problems of the original Sanskrit text with the help of Śrīdharasvāmī's commentary.
- 3. The entire Bhāgavata Purāna was reduced into Assamese verse by the joint efforts of several contemporary poets. Besides Śankaradeva other writers who undertook the translation of different sections were Ananta Kandali (Books IV, VI and a section of Book X), Keśavacarana (Books VII and IX), Gopālacarana Dvija (Book III), Kavi Kalāpacandra (Sections of Book IV), Śrī Viṣnu Bhārati (Sections of Book IV), Ratnākara Miśra (Sections of Book IV), Śrīcandra Deva (Sections of Book IV), Anirudha Kāyastha (Sections of Books IV and V), and Hari (Sections of Book V). All the Books of the Assamese version of the Bhāgavata Purāna have been published in one volume by Śrī Harinarayana Dutta Barua, Nalbari.

Evam sa bhagavān Kṛṣṇo vṛndāvanacaraḥ kvacit |
Yayau Rāmamṛte rājan kālindim sakhibhivṛtaḥ ||
Atha gāvaśca gopāśca nidāghatāpa pīḍitaḥ |
Duṣṭam jalam papustasyāstṛṣārttā viṣadūṣitam ||
10/15/47-48

and compare them with Sankara's translation:

Dineka Govindadeva Baloka lagata nalai āpuni melilā save gāi |

Gopa siśu sava same Jamunāra tīre tīre dhanugaņa phuraņta carāi ||

Jeṣṭha māsara ghora raudre piḍileka ati eko āra tṛṣāta najāni |

kālira hradata nāmi nirantare garu gopa pāraimāne pile viṣapānī ||

10/10995.

To make the passage more clear and homely the poet rendered the expressions sakhibhivṛtaḥ and nidāgha-tāpapīḍītaḥ respectively as gopaśiśusava same and jeṣṭha māsara ghora raudre pīḍileka ati. For in Assam, Jaiṣṭha is particularly significant as a month of extreme hot days when pools and rivulets dry up and grasses in the field are scorched by the hot sun.

Sankaradeva's translations in this way are of an interpretative character. The poet had access to and utilised other Purāṇas or commentaries in making the Assamese version. For instance, we may refer to Sankaradeva's allusion to the Kadamba tree on the bank of the Kāliya lake having been touched by the feet of Garuḍa where the bird rested while carrying nectar. This incident, small though it is, is not in the Bhāgavata; our author probably introduced it from other sources. In this way his translation endeavours to elaborate, and to illustrate, the different ideas and episodes of the original Sanskrit texts perfectly in homely and direct Assamese style so that even an illiterate man can appreciate and understand. The Assamese version of the Bhāgavata is, therefore, looked upon both as text and commentary of the original.

Although intended for the common people, his translation was admired by scholars also. Regarding its popularity Śańkaradeva's biographer Bhūṣaṇa Dvija records an illuminating incident. Kaṇṭhabhūṣaṇa, an Assamese Brāhmaṇa, went to Banaras to study Vedānta philosophy under a Sannyāsī named Brahmānanda. Brahmānanda one day read out to his students some Ślokas from the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, but the students understanding not a single verse of it remained silent. Brahmānanda, however, was surprised to find that his Assamese student explained the ślokas without any aid from the teacher. Being interrogated Kaṇṭhabhūṣaṇa replied that he was already acquainted with the Assamese version of the text made by Śaṅkaradeva which was written in so simple, expressive and convincing a style that even a woman or a Śūdra could understand it.

Of all the books of the Bhāgavata, the Ādi Daśama, the first part of Book X, is very popular. This Book describes the incidents of Kṛṣṇa's early life, such as child Kṛṣṇa's killing of different demons, his playing at games and tending of cattle with his friends in the fields and woods, his stealing of butter, milk and curd, and quarrel with the milk-maids, and the various chastisements he had from his foster-mother Yaśodā. Though permeated with religious emotion, the Daśama gives an intensely human and realistic picture of child life, a mother's love and grief for her little son, response to Nature, and other poetic embelishments that eternally move the human heart. It should however be noted that unlike the Vaiṣṇavite literature of other provinces Rādhā does not appear in these scenes and further she is not even a character in Śaṅkarite literature.

The Bhāgavata was an inexhaustible source from which Sankaradeva drew again and again. Besides the translation, he composed a large number of other books with material from this Purāṇa. His Nimi Nava Samvāda is a doctrinal treatise based on Book XI of the Bhāgavata (Nava siddha kathā ito ekādaśa skanddha). Nārada here recounts before Vāsudeva the discussions which took place between king Nimi and the nine sages, Kavi, Havi, Antarikṣa, Prabuddha, Pippalāyana, Avihorta, Drāviḍa, Camasa and Karabhajana on nine different doctrinal points. Each sage expounds one of these problems put to him by the king, namely, the nature of the Bhāgavata religion, Bhakti, Māyā, way of escape from Māyā, Brahmayoga and Karmayoga, demerits of an uninitiated (Abhakta), and nature of Avatāra. Here some of the abstruse metaphysical problems are expounded in the Assamese language.

Śri Śri Śańkaradeva by Bhūṣaṇa Dvija, edited by Durgadhara Barkakati, Jorhat, 1925, p. 144 ff.

From its very nature, the work does not strive to reach any high level of poetry, though some of its verses bear mark of literary accomplishments. The merits of Bhakti are expressed in splendid and popular similes:

Bhaje Mādhavaka nāma smare sarvakṣaṇa |
Ekebāre sije tāra tini prayojana ||
Prathame opaje prema lakṣaṇa bhakati |
Gṛha śarīrate pāche mile birakati ||
Premara āspada Kṛṣṇa mūrti spūrti haya |
Eke kāle mile āsi sampada tritaya ||
Atiśaya kṣudhāta bhujanta yena mate |
Sije tini prayojana pratyeka grāsate ||
Hove tuṣṭa deha puṣṭa kṣudhā guchi yāya |
Prema bhakatira rājā śunā abhiprāya ||
Alpa bhakatita hove prema ati puṣṭa |
Kiñcita bhojane yena kichumāna tuṣṭa ||5

"He who takes to the name of Mādhava and meditates on it finds all his three needs fulfilled at the same time. First he finds a seizing of love, the sign of devotion, then an indifference to his household and his body, an appreciation grows of the image of Kṛṣṇa, the object of love. These three assets come to one at a time, as if one finds food when one is extremely hungry, and finds a fulfilment of one's three needs at each morsel: one is pleased, one's body is restored, and hunger itself disappears. Listen, O king, to the nature of love and devotion; even a little of devotion sustains love well, just as little food satisfies some."

More homely and attractive are the following couplets:

Yena pitṛ śiśuka lāḍu lobha diyaya |
Tāka pāibo buli śiśu auṣadha pivaya ||
Pāche khaṇḍa lāḍuve garbharo roga hare |
Sehi mate ajñānī vedara śikṣā dhare ||
Pāche Vede bole era isava kāmanā |
Niṣkāme karibā eka Kṛṣṇata arpaṇā |

Navasiddha-Samväda, published by Śrī Tirthanatha Goswami, Dhalara Satra.

"Just as the father tempts the child with a sweet-ball and the child in expectation of it swallows the medicine, later a fragment of the sweet-ball cures it of all its ailments, so the ignorant takes to the love of the Vedas; later the Vedas say, Leave these desires: without attachment do you dedicate yourself to Kṛṣṇa."

His Bhakti Pradīpa⁶ also analyses the various elements that constitute Bhakti. Though the work is said to have been compiled from the Garuḍa Purāṇa, in fact its contents tally more with the materials of Book XI of the Bhāgavata. Here Arjuna puts to Kṛṣṇa the following questions:

Hena śuni Dhanañjaye sudhilā dunāi |
Bhakatisi bhailā yeve moksara upāya ||
Kimate bhakati kare kimate lakṣaṇa |
Kahiyoko hauka mora janma-nivāraṇa ||
Kona vidhi karibeka bhakati tomāta |
Kenabā prayāsa āche kahiyo āmāta ||
Yito jane kare āna devatā bhakati |
Tāra kena gati hove kahiyo samprati ||

"Hearing this Dhananjaya asks once again:
If then devotion is the means of salvation,
How does one make devotion? What are its characteristics?
Tell me that I may be relieved of birth.
How should one devote oneself to you?
What means is there do tell me.
One who devotes oneself to other gods:
Tell me, how fares such a person?"

Among the nine means of developing the attitude of Bhakti (navavidhā bhakti) the author here greatly emphasizes on Śravaṇa and Kīrtana, i.e. listening and chanting of God's names. Śaṅkaradeva preached a religion of supreme surrender to the One and, therefore, his creed is known as Ekaśaraṇīyā-dharma. In the Ekaśaraṇīyā-dharma, the worship of other gods and goddesses is strictly prohibited. This has been made clear by Kṛṣṇa in the Bhakti Pradīpa:

Eka citte tumi moka mātra karā sevā | Pariharā dūrate yateka āna devā |

Critically edited with Introduction, variant readings, and copious wordnotes by Śrī Maheswar Neog.

Huyoka śaraṇāpanna eka mote mātra | Moke bhajā huibā teve mukutira pātra || Nāma nuśunibā tumi āna devatāra | Yena mate nuhibe bhakati vyābhicāra ||

Devote yourself to me with a single mind Forsake from a distance all other gods. Surrender yourself to me alone, Devote to me, then will you be fit for salvation. Never listen to names of other gods that your devotion may remain unsullied."

His Anādi Pātana is mainly an adaptation from Book III of the Bhāgavata, though a few episodes are introduced from the Vāmana Purāṇa. The book deals with cosmological matters and is devoid of literary merit. Guṇamālā (Garland of Praises) is one of the last works of Śaṅkaradeva composed at the request of the Koch king Naranārāyaṇa. In essence, Guṇamālā is a little hand-book based on Books X and XI of the Bhāgavata. It is a stotra or stutitype of poem with six small sections containing hymns of praise to Viṣṇu and Kṛṣṇa. The author within the compass of a single laudatory verse recounts many incidents from Kṛṣṇa's life making them easy to remember. In fact, there is not a Vaiṣṇavite disciple who cannot recite Guṇamālā from beginning to end from memory. Superabundance of alliteration with jingling rhymes make the poem suitable for recitation. By way of example, the following verses may be quoted:

Kālika damilā
Devaka tuşilā
Kešī vatsavaka
Lagāilā camaka
Tumi bārambāra
Pṛthivīra bhāra
Indraka damilā
Vanata bhramilā
Paši raṅgašāla karilā āsphāla

Pūtanā śuṣilā |
vrajaka bhūṣilā ||
samasta daityaka |
dakāilā yamaka ||
huyā avatāra |
khandilā apāra ||
Brahmāyo namilā |
gopika krīḍilā ||
yata mahāmāla |
vadhilā gopāla ||

"You subjugated the serpent Kāli and squeezed out the Rākṣāsī Putanā. You delighted the gods and adorned Vraja. You terrified all demons like Kešī, and Vatsavaka. Again and again you incarnate yourself and lessen the burden of the earth. You subjugated Indra in the forests and played with Gopīs. You came on the stage, stormed and slew all the terrible forces."

The next outstanding literary production of Sankaradeva is the Kirtana⁷ which even to-day exercises unique influence upon the mind and thought of the Assamese people. It is looked upon with the same religious feeling and reverence as Rāmacaritamānasa of Tulasīdāsa in northern India. There is no Assamese Hindu home which does not possess a copy of Kirtana either in manuscript written on sānchi-leaves or in print, no house which does not recite some of its verses on religious occasions and during illness.

The date of composition of the Kirtana is not known, Some biographers say that Sankaradeva did not write the book during one particular period, and that the composition was spread over several years. From the methodical arrangement of the chapters, it may be said that though the book was written at different periods, the entire work however was planned and it was certainly not a work of his early years. Furthermore, the Kirtana is not a single poem but a selective collection of twentysix poems comprising about 2261 couplets in diverse metres. Most of the poems are, however, adaptations from the Bhagavata Purana. Two of its poems Sahasra Nāma Vṛttānta and Ghunucā were contributions by other writers. They were written respectively by two of his disciples Ananta Kandali and Śrīdhar Kandali and were incorporated in the anthology at the desire of the authors. Each poem included in the Kīrtana is of the nature of an independent kāvya modelled after Sanskrit prototypes and illuminative of many didactic doctrinal point. The very name Kirtana is suggestive of the fact that the poems were recited in religious congregations and services. Each poem bears a ghoṣā, a refrain. These poems are recited by the leader of the religious gathering. After reading a couplet, the leader repeats the ghosā or refrain and the party takes it up along with the clapping of hands.

The first poem of the Kīrtana, Caturviṃśati Avatāra (Twentyfour incarnations) describes briefly the twentyfour incarnations of God, making particular references to the divine personality of the Kṛṣṇa avatāra and to his activities towards liberation of mankind. The subject-matter of the second poem Nāmāparādha is said to have been taken from the Svargakhaṇḍa of the Padmapurāṇa. The poem is in the form of a dialogue between Nārada and the four Siddhas, sons of Brahmā who dwelt at length on the various ways of emancipation in the Kali Age. Pāṣaṇḍamardana, the next poem, is so named as it refers to the subjugation of the evil mind (Pāṣaṇḍa mati). The poem draws its materials from the Bhagavata, Visnudharmottara, Vrhat Naradiya Purana, the Padma Purāna, and the Suta Samhitā. It recommends constant recitations of the name of God to be the best medicine in this world of sufferings. Sankara realised that the Brahmanical pretensions had raised a barrier between man and God, and so both by pen and pulpit, he endeavoured to break down all prejudices of caste, creed and rank. In many passages Sankara emphatically laid down that to obtain final release or to come to the presence of God one need neither be a Brahmana, nor a sage, nor should one know all the scriptures (Nelage deva dvija ṛṣi huibe | nelage samasta śastra janibe ||). The poem is important as it makes clear that the Vaisnavism preached by Śańkaradeva was democratic in spirit, principle and organisation and all people could embrace it. For the very same reasons Mohammedans and other tribal peoples were converted to his creed.

There are several popular editions of Kirtana. The earliest printed edition was made by Haribilasa Agarwala in 1876 A.D.

The Dhyāna Varṇana (Description of Meditation) is a small poem of twentyeight stanzas. The poem holds a magnificent picture of Vaikuṇṭha, the celestial abode of Viṣṇu, where all devotees aspire to go after death.

Vaikuntha nāme āche mahā thāna ||
Sārī śārī rañje vimānacaya |
Vaiduryaya hirā marakatamaya ||
Candra Sūrjya yena prakāśe āti |
Najāni yāta paśi dina rāti ||
Cāru sarovara nirmmala jala |
Sugandha padma śobhe utpala ||
Āche rājahaṃsa samuhe rañji |
Lilāye mṛṇāla bhuñje ubhañji ||
Pāve pārijāta malayā vāva |
Catake tyaje sulalita rāva ||
Bhramara gaņe gāve hari gīta |
Vaiṣṇava jaņe śuni ānandita ||

"There is the rare place named Vaikuntha.

There are row upon row of palaces, studded with sapphires and diamonds.

The Moon and the Sun shine dazzling there. It is difficult to know whether it is day or night.

There are lovely lakes with clear water, Fragrant lotuses and lilies bloom there, All are beautified by geese.

Pleasurably they feed on the roots of the lotus.

There is the Pārijāta flower and the Malaya breeze.

The Catakas cry sweetly,

The bees hum hymns to Hari,

Listening which the Vaiṣṇavas are pleased."

The Ajāmilopākhyāna (Story of Ajāmila) taken from the Book VI of the Bhāgavata narrates the story of a Brāhmaṇa who lived in open sin with a Sudra harlot and broke all laws sacred to his caste in maintaining his mistress and the ten children begotten on this woman. At the time of his death the sinful Ajāmila called his youngest son Nārāyaṇa to him and because he happened to utter the name of Nārāyaṇa (which was also a name of God) at the time of death, the soul of the Brāhmaṇa was taken to the abode of Viṣṇu and not to the city of Yama. The poem emphasizes on the merits of chanting God's name: even an unconscious recital of the name of God brings salvation to hard sinners just as abdominal disease is cured by even unconscious swallowing of a powerful medicine (Yena mahauṣadhi najāni bhuñjile tāro garbha roga hare).

The merit of devotion is propounded through the well-known story of Prahlada in the poem Prahlada Carita taken from Book VII of the Bhāgavata. The same doctrine is made explicit in Gajendropākhyāna, a small poem of thirty stanzas from Book VIII of the Bhāgavata. It describes a furious battle scene between Grāha (Crocodile) and Gajendra (Elephant). Gajendra was overpowered by Grāha and he was counting the hour of death. Suddenly, it flashed into his mind that devotion to Hari might save him from this predicament. So he prayed to Viṣṇu with devotion by holding a lotus with his trunk:—

Ehi buli maraṇata nabhaila vikal Śuṇḍe merāi dharilanta suvarṇa kamala || Parama ānande mādhavata diyā citta | Gajendre karilā stuti ati viparīta ||

"Thus thought he, and cast away all fear of death; with his trunk he caught hold of a golden lotus; with great joy and faith in Mādhava, Gajendra began to worship Him intensely."

Viṣṇu came and rescued his distressed devotee in time. Many of the verses of this poem are distinguished by great poetic beauty, particularly the description of the Trikūṭa mountain and its adjacent lake, the dwelling place of Grāha.

In Haramohana (adapted from Book VIII of the Bhagavata) by enumerating feminine charms in detail the poet creates an image of Divya Kanyā (Celestial Nymph). Siva entreated Vișnu to show him his feminine form. Visnu, therefore, transformed himself into the form of Mohini (Enchantress); at her sight violent emotions of love suddenly let themselves loose in Siva's mind and Siva losing self-control and all sense of decorum and decency ran after Mohinī like an infatuated man. In portraying Mohinī, the poet selected feminine physical charms a direct erotic appeal. The description of the Divya Kanyā becomes in the following verses pictorial and at the same time full of delicate voluptuousness:

Tapta suvarnara sama

jvale dehā nirupama lalita valita hāta pāva | Cakşu kamalara păsi mukhe manohara hāsi saghane daraśai kāma bhāva || Urddhaka ksepanta bhantā karanta katākṣa chaţā lilā gati dekhai phure pāka Soloke uchala khopā khase pārijāta thopā bāma hāte samvaranta tāka | Karnata kundala dole stana halaphala kare gale ratnamālā jhiki pāre | Suvarna kankana dhvani kare runu jhunu suni prakāse hṛdaya hema hāre || Kanthe lare satasari layalāse kādhe bhari āgabādi pāche guci yānta Pindhi śādi khontā jāli yena mairāya kare cāli Haraka katākṣa kari cānta Daraśanta kāsa pithi kşano häse sama dṛsti cāhi lāje cānta cakṣu mudi | Bhramanta aneka bhave uruvāve vastra vāve ucca kuca kumbha have udi [] Kankāle kinkiņi bāje carana kamala māje ratnara nupura runa jhuna Hāle ati madhyadeśa Samsāra mohinī veśa eko ange nähi khati khuna || "Like burnt gold her body shines unparalleled, graceful and developed are her hands and feet, her eyes, the petals of the lotus, a ravishing smile on her lips, repeatedly does she reveal a coquettish manner. She plays with a ball, scatters flashes from her eyes, she sways this way and that at ease, her high chignon loosens, drops her cluster of pārijāta, she manages that with her left hand. On her ears hang eardrops, her breasts shake, On her neck a gold wreath shines. One listens to the tinkling that her gold bangles make, her breast is beautified by a gold necklace. On her neck shakes the seven-rolled chain, she sets her steps with grace and ease, seeming to step forward she moves backwards, putting on her śārī with some air, as if a peacock spreads its fan, she casts her glance sideways at Hara. She reveals her sides and her back, her look as if she would smile, looking in bashfulness she shuts her eyes. She roams about in various ways, she makes her clothes float in the breeze and the high pitchers of her breast are bared. On her waist a girdle jingles, sound run-jhun jewelled nupuras, between her lotus feet. Her middle bends, she is in the garb of the world-enchantress, not a blemish is on any of her limbs."

By way of warning, there is a sermon on the plight of men who are entangled in the web of women. The irresistible temptation of women is emphasized in the following couplets:

> Ghora nārī māyā sarva māyāte kutsita Mahā siddha muniro katākṣe hare cita Darśane kare tapa japa yoga bhaṅga | Jāni jūānīgaṇe kāminīra ere saṅga |

"Of all the terrible apparitions of the world woman's is the ugliest. A slight side glance of her's captivates even the hearts of celebrated sages. Her sight destroys prayer, penance and meditation. Knowing this the wise keeps away from the company of women."

It should however, be noted that this was not the attitude of Sankaradeva towards women in general; elsewhere he revealed a more appreciative attitude and took into account diverse delicate qualities of female character. For example: Karma samayata toka mantri hena lekhi Rangara belāta yena tai prāņa-sakhī Snehara prastave tai matr hena thana Savana belāta tai dāsīra samāna (Hariścandra Upākhyāna).

"In time of work, you offer counsel like a minister. In sports you are my dearest mate. In respect of showing affection you resemble my mother. At bed-time you serve me as a faithful maid."

In the poem Sisulīlā the various activities of child Kṛṣṇa and his god-like powers are depicted in sweet and sonorous language. Thus we have a pretty picture of the naughty Krsna as a child:

> Thiyadangā diyā pāche tumi dāmodara Anartha kariyā phurā govālira ghara || Anandate samasta govāligana āsi Krsnara akīrtti Yaśodāta denta hāsi Ki bhaila tomāra ito tanaya durjjana | Krsnara nimitte ara narahe fivana Gāi natu dohante dāmuri melegai Grha pasi curi kari khanta dugdha dai Vanarako khuvave Govinda kino canda Vānara nakhāi yeve kobaī bhānge bhānda || Dhuki yeve napāve manata nāi tuşti Sikiyara para ane uralata uthi

"Then, after learning walking, O Damodara, You began making mischief in the houses of the milkmaids. The amused milkmaids also came to Yasoda and lodged laughingly their complaint against Krsna.

What a wicked son have you given birth to? Because of Krsna, life has become intolerable.

He sets free the calves before the cows are milched.

He would also steal into the house and consume all the milk and Govinda is so wicked that he feeds even monkeys with these, And when monkeys refuse to eat more, he destroys the pails. Putting the pails beyond his reach on a hanging rope is no safety: For he fetches them from the lift by getting up on the wooden threshing block."

The poem Rasakrida taken from Book X of the Bhagavata, relates to Kṛṣṇa's Rāsa dance with the gopīs in the Arcadian grove on the bank of the Yamunā on a silvery autumnal full-moon night. The poem devotes a large number of verses to scenes from Nature where nature appears to be pulsating with life. In the midst of the Rāsa dance Kṛṣṇa suddenly disappeared and the gopīs approached the trees and the shrubs on the bank of the Yamunā and entreated them to tell the whereabouts of their beloved. Feelingly does the poet describe scenes from Nature:

Ucca vṛkṣa dekhi sodhe sādari |
Śuniyo aśvattha vaṭa pākaḍi ||
Yāhante dekhiyā Nanda kumāra |
Nenta curi kari citta āmāra |
He kuruvaka aśoka campā |
Kahiyo kathā karā anukampā || * * *
Ovā tulasi samidhāna diyā |
Tumi Govindara caraṇa priyā || * * *
He jāṭi yuṭhi sakhi mālati |
Kṛṣṇa parase ki labhilā gati || * * *
He āma jāma bela bakula |
Nāi upakāri tomāra tula ||
Kṛṣṇara virahe dekhā āndhāra |
Kovā kaika gaila prāṇa āmāra ||

"Seeing a tall tree, the beautiful damsel asked: Hear me, O you banyan tree, Nanda's son saw me from here, And stole away my soul.

O you Kurubaka, Aśoka and Campā trees, speak you to me and show compassion.

O you Tulasi tree, give me a reply, you are the beloved of Govinda's feet.

O Jāti, Juti, and friendly Mālati creepers, Did you attain the supreme way at Kṛṣṇa's touch?

O Āma, Jāma, Bela and Bakula trees, benefactors like you none else are.

At Kṛṣṇa's absence I see darkness all round; Say where has the soul of my life gone?"

The commotion of the milkmaids of Gokula caused by the note of Kṛṣṇa's flute is very graphically described:

Su-svara madhura kari Hari gāilā gīta || Šuni kāme utravāla huyā gopigaņe | Dileka lavada gīta dhvani nirikṣaņe || Karnata kuṇḍala dole begate hānthite | Cittata dharile Kṛṣṇe cale alakṣite || Kato gopī jāya gāi dohanaka edi ||

Ăkhāte thākila dugdha carusaite paḍi ||

Piyante āchila śiśu tāhāko nagaṇi |

Pati śuśruṣāko eḍi jāya kato jani ||

Kato gopī āchila svāmīra parašante | Adha bhuñje huyā kato jāya lavadante ||

"Hari made his sweet voice more melodious still, and sang a song.

Hearing his song, the Gopis were troubled by love,
And in their unrest they ran in the direction of the music.
Earrings swayed from their ears as they ran.
Kṛṣṇa captured their souls by stealth and wile.
Many Gopis left their cows unmilked.
Others left their pails of milk on ovens uncared for.
Some even forgot their babies on their breasts.
Many others went away neglecting the care of their husbands,

Some even went away from the embrace of their beloveds. Yet others left their half-finished meal and began to run."

Syamantaka Harana relates to the gem that daily yielded eight loads of gold, and dispelled all fear of portents, famine, death, diseases, tigers and serpents. This gem which Satrājita received from the Sun-god was stolen by king Jāmbuvāna while he went on a hunt. Kṛṣṇa recovered it from Jāmbuvāna after a great fight. In this spirited poem full of martial thrill the poet presents a vivid and vigorous description of the battle characterised by strong dramatic elements. The following couplets alone will give some idea of the fight between Jāmbuvāna and Kṛṣṇa:—

Hena śuni Jāmbavanta dhāilā mahā balavanta |
Nicini svāmika pāche dharilanta yuddha kāche ||
Sāmānya manuşya buli mahākrodhe gailā jvali |
Nājāni prabhāva ati lagāileka hatāhati ||
Duyo huyā mahā kruddha lagāileka ghora yuddha |
Duyo mātangara līlā bariṣe parvata śilā ||
Kata beli hāne gacha kato kope cāpe kāṣa |
Yujilanta māla bandhe dhari dhari bhari chānde ||
Duiro duiko nāhi tuṣṭi hāne vajra sama muṣṭi |
Māmsara kāraņe yena yujanta duigoṭa śena |
Keho bale nuhi kṣṣṇa Yujanta āthaiśa dina |

"Hearing this Jāmbavanta, of immense strength, made a dash, knowing not Him to be the master, even Him he caught for a duel.

Taking Him to be an ordinary mortal, He flew into fierce rage.

Knowing not His supreme power, He bagan to exchange blows, with Him.

Both of them grew exceedingly angry, and began a terrible duel.

It was as if two elephants were at play, and mountain rocks began to fall in showers.

For a while, trees began to be hurled.

With consuming anger, each would sometimes close on the other,

They also closed on each other in wrestling fashion, catching and catching yet again and fighting by planting their feet.

None is satisfied with the inflictions on the other. Each struck the other in thunderous blows. It was as if two eagles were fighting for the one and the same piece of meat. None of the two was inferior to the other in strength, And for twentyeight days they fought on."

Kaṃsavadha, a poem of two hundred and thirteen couplets, describes Kṛṣṇa's heroic exploits finally leading to the killing of Kaṁsa. Gopī Uddhava Saṃvāda is a little poem of about thirty-three stanzas relating to Kṛṣṇa's message to the Gopīs of Gokula, which was sent through Uddhava. The poem is full of sadness and describes in mournful verses lamentations of the Gopīs on their separation from Kṛṣṇa. Kujīra Vāṇchā-pūraṇa (Fulfilment of Kuji's desire) and Akrūrara Vāṇchā-pūraṇa (Fulfilment of Akrura's desire) describe how God fulfils the desire of his devotees. Jarāsandha Yuddha and Kāla Yavana Vadha give the stories of struggles between Jarāsandha and Balorāma and killing of the former by the fiery glance of Mucukunda at the contrivance of Kṛṣṇa. Mucukunda Stuti is a hymn of adoration.

In Nāradara Kṛṣṇa Darśana, (from Book X of the Bhāgavata) the author wanted to illustrate that Kṛṣṇa is omniscient. One day Nārada went to the female apartments of Kṛṣṇa's palace at Dvāraka, and found in one room Kṛṣṇa enjoying the company of his principal wife Rukmiṇī. He then proceeded to the next room where he found Kṛṣṇa again with Lakṣmī. The sage went to all the 16,008 rooms of the palace and found Krsna in every one of them enjoying separately the company of his 16,008 wives. Vipraputra Anavana (Bringing back of the Brāhmana's children) relates that while Krsna was the ruler of Dvārakā, there came one day to his palace a Brahmana with a dead child in his arms. He cried out that in a kingdom where Brahmanas had to weep in sorrow the king was not a Ksatriya but a mere dancer (Jāhāra rājyata śoke kānde dvijagana | Nuhike kṣatriya sito naṭara lakṣaṇa ||). The Brāhmana had nine children, he said, all of whom had died in infancy. Arjuna, who was sitting with Krsna, hurriedly approached the Brahmana and tried to console him. Arjuna promised to the Brāhmana that he would see that his next child would not die and swore that if he could not protect the next child of the Brahmana he would burn himself to death. But the tenth child of the Brahmana also died immediately after birth. The Brāhmana went to Ariuna and rebuked him for promising to do a thing that he could not perform. Arjuna, however, left the Brahmana and immediately went to Yamapuri the abode of the dead, in search of the child. He could not find the child there; then in vain he went to different regions. Unsuccessful he came back to Dvārakā and arranged to burn himself to death. But Krsna now asked Arjuna not to immolate himself and promised to show him the children of the Brāhmana. Krsna ascended his chariot and with Arjuna drove it over seven oceans, seven islands, and crossing the region of night arrived at the kingdom of waters. There they saw Visnu reposing on the serpent Ananta with the ten children of the Brahmana. Krsna and Arjuna worshipped Visnu and begged of him the children. The children were brought back to earth again and handed over to the Brāhmana. The central idea of the poem is that without God's grace nothing can be performed merely by human endeavours. (Paurusa purusara kichu nui | Kṛṣṇara prasade samasta hui ||). When the news of the bringing back of the Brahmana's children reached the ears of Daivaki she also entreated Kṛṣṇa to give back her six children killed by Kamsa. This is the subject-matter of Daivakira Putra Anayana, a little poem of thirtyfour couplets. Krsna brought back these six sons who were in Sutalapuri in the company of king Bali. After visiting their mother the children went directly to Vaikunthapuri by the grace of Krsna. The next poem Veda Stuti (from Book X of the Bhāgavata) is philosophical in content and full of reflective thoughts. For example :-

Mukuṭa kuṇḍala hena suvarṇara bhinna nuhi michā mātra nāma rūpa yata |

Ahankāra pancabhūta tomāra pṛthaka nuhi prabhu paramārtha vicārata |

"The crown, and the earrings are not different from gold in species; The name, the shape and such other decorations put forth a false show. In deep consideration, O lord, even pride, and the five elements are not different from you."

Another semi-dramatic poem, consisting chiefly of conversation is Dāmodara Viprākhyāna, adapted from Book X of the Bhāgavata. Dāmodara a poor but devout Brāhmaṇa could hardly maintain himself and his wife. His wife one day asked Dāmodara to visit Kṛṣṇa, who was one of Dāmodar's friends in school. Dāmodar hesitated to see his friend who was then in an affluent condition; but at last he had to yield to the importunity of his wife and started to his friend's house with a little packet of presents of fried rice. Kṛṣṇa was delighted to see his old school companion and enjoyed heartily the small present brought by Dāmodara. The poet here wanted to show how God is pleased even with small offerings given in sincere devotion. In the centre of this small narrative poem, presented in a simple popular tone, stands prominently the character of a poor Brāhmaṇa. The poem in beautiful words speaks of a friend's affection and duties.

Līlāmālā (107 stanzas) recounts mostly the incidents of Kṛṣṇa's early life and Vaikuntha Prayana describes the final departure of Krsna. Both are adapted from Book X of the Bhāgavata Purāņa. Vaikuntha Prayāņa or Kṛṣṇara Vaikuntha Prayāņa is the largest poem of Kīrtana comprising 254 stanzas divided into nineteen sections. It describes the migration of the families of Yadu from Dvārakā to Prabhāsa, their indulgences in liquor and merry-making, quarrel and destruction of the Yadus, the passing away of Kṛṣṇa shot by an arrow of a hunter named Jara and Krsna's message to Arjuna who carried the remaining members of the Yadus to Indraprastha. The poem opens with a discussion between Krsna and Uddhava who was informed by the former of the impending destruction of the Yadu race. Kṛṣṇa instructed Uddhava on Bhakti and directed him to set out on a pilgrimage. The last section of the poem ends with a scene where Uddhava gave to Vidura the news of the Yadu-race and Kṛṣṇa's passing away. The entire poem is dominated by a sad note. Naturally one would expect Kirtana to end with the poem Vaikuntha Prayāna, but Śankaradeva incorporated in it Ureṣāvarnana, a poem mainly on the temple of Jagannatha. Materials of the poem are taken from Brahma Purāṇa, and it relates to the setting up of the Jagannātha kṣetra and erection of sacred temples in Orissa by king Indradyumna, in much detail.

Kirtana was the mature product of Sankaradeva's mind; as we have already observed a number of episodes from the Bhagavata are presented in it with the definite intention of telling the people in a clear and straightforward style the rudiments of the doctrine of Bhakti, the ethics and moral code for a bhakta (devotee). Here we find, a number of stories, first of its kind in our literature. charmingly told, combining sermons and prayers couched in a feeling language. But to a modern reader the merits of Kirtana do not depend so much upon didactic doctrines, moral sermons or theology but upon splendid expressions, grand descriptive passages, originality of treatment and marvellous rhythmic felicities that run throughout all the poems of the book. As for the secret of its popularity, Śrī Jnananath Bora rightly says, "All the sentiments pleasure and pain, love and separation, anger and forgiveness, are equally blended in Kirtana. It affords pleasure to all classes of readers. To children it gives stories and songs for amusement, it delights the young with true poetic beauty and the elderly people find here religious instructions and wisdom."

Kirtana stands as a book of grand verse not only for its religious outlook but also for elevated and noble thoughts that transcend all religions. We find such striking passages of universal appeal as:—

Manuşyara äyu jata varişa samkhyāta | Ardheka nisphala jāya jānibā nidrāta || Viṃśati variṣa āra jāya omolante | Neya daśa variṣa dhanaka upārjjante || Vṛddhakāle jāya śeṣa variṣa viṃśati | Ekō kārya sādhibāka nāhike śakati || Sarīrako pīḍe vyādhi cakṣuye nākale | Āśā pāśe bāndhiyā gṛhata thāki gale ||

(Prahlāda Caritra)

"Of the years which are taken to make the span of life, half are wasted in sleep. Twenty years man spends in play, and ten years in accumulating riches. Old age takes his last twenty years, when he is incapable of doing anything. His body is then tormented by disease, his eyes stop functioning, and hope being his last resort, he breaks up, keeping himself to his house." Such familiar ideas as :-

Vișaya cintâya

Parama pramatta

phuro mahā mana darpe

Tumi apramatta

hele mārā tāka

induraka yena sarpe ||

(Mucukunda Stuti)

Insensible and arrogant

I wander about with thoughts of the world.

You being devoid of arrogance destroy me easily, just as a serpent kills a rat.

Such pithy expressions of philosophical import as:-

Sarīraka mai bolo vuddhi bhaila hata | Hiyāta harāilā tumi khojo bāhirata ||

(Śiśulīlā)

"My intellect has been clouded as I call my body I', You are within me, and in vain I search you outside.

and such noble things as -

Brāhmaņara caņḍālara nibicāri kula | Dātāta corata yena dṛṣṭi eka tula || Nicata sādhuta yāra bhaila eka jñana | Tāhākese paṇḍita bolaya sarvajana ||

(Śrī Kṛṣṇara Vaikuntha Prayāṇa)

"Him indeed all call a wise man who does not distinguish between the caste of a Brāhmaṇa and that of a Caṇḍāla; who looks at a donor and a thief with an eye of equality, and who does not differentiate between a debased man and an honest person."

Also:

Kukura candāla garddabharo ātmā Rāma || Jāniyā savāko padi karibā praņāma ||

"God is the soul of the dogs, the donkeys and of the outcastes. Knowing this, pay reverence to all living creatures.

Limitation of space precludes further quoting.

Of his other Kāvyas Hariścandra Upākhyāna⁸ was composed while Śańkara was a student at Mahendra Kandali's school. The materials of the poem were collected mainly from Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa (Mārkaṇḍeya purāṇara kathāta pradhāna | payāre racibo Hariścandra upākhyāna ||). All through the poem the author has extolled the merits of bhakti. Another kāvya of his younger age is Rukmiṇi Haraṇa (Abduction of Rukmiṇi).9

Rukminī Harana is a charming idyll, the materials of which are said to have been taken from the Bhagavata and Harivamsa. In the opening verses, the poet states that he has composed the kāvya from materials collected from both these texts to make it more palatable just as one mixes milk with honey to make it a sweeter drink. To give the poem a touch of realism, the author adds to the original tale scenes of common domestic experience which transforms the Puranic story into a narrative of popular experience. Rukmini, daughter of Bhismaka, king of Vidarbha, chose Krsna for her husband. Her parents also agreed to give her in marriage to Kṛṣṇa. But Rukma, her brother stood in the way and arranged her marriage with Śiśupāla. Rukmiņī, in despair, sent messages to Kṛṣṇa through Vedanidhi, an old boastful, tall-talker Brāhmana, to rescue her from Siśupāla. Vedanidhi plays in the poem the part of a friend and confidant. Vedanidhi hastened to Dvārakā to fetch Krsna. Krsna accompanied by the Brāhmana immediately started for Kundina. Kṛṣṇa's chariot rolled on with the speed of the wind, swift as a naraca arrow, and with uproarious movements like the thunder of destructions, Feeling like losing his senses the poor Brahmana in fear covered his eyes with his palms. His head reeled and reeled and Vedanidhi dropped down senseless on the floor of the chariot. Krsna slowed down. attended to the Brahmana and restored him to his senses. On the eve of the wedding day Kṛṣṇa arrived at Kuṇdina and as arranged before eloped with Rukminī while she was on her way to the temple of Bhavani. Rukma, and other princes who assembled at the marriage, pursued them in vain, Kṛṣṇa carried Rukminī to Dyaraka and celebrated the marriage with all pomp and merrymaking. This wide theme offers the poet full scope to exercise his powers of realistic descriptions. Domestic discussions about Rukmini's marriage, Kṛṣṇa's arrival, war with the rival suitors, ^{8.} Edited with an introduction by Sri P. Goswami, Gauhati.

Edited with an introduction from Dr. B. Kakati by Śrī Harinarayan Dutta Barua, Nalbari.

marriage rites, etc. are elaborately portrayed by the poet. Even the medieval Assamese personal ornaments and costumes are presented in all their artistic designs and colourfulness. Here Sankara described the wedding, doubtless from the models of existing domestic ceremonies, with abundance of popular pictures. The marriage scene has touches both of pleasant humour and pathos. To the wedding came all the gods and the denizens from the three worlds and each of them brought valuable presents befitting his own social dignity and prestige. Siva was, however, put into an amusing situation, as he had nothing to offer. Even his wearing apparels were of tiger-skin, in his hands were only śūla and dambaru, a bull was all his possession; his forehead carried the crescent moon; serpents adorned his body as ornaments, skulls as necklaces and his wallet contained nothing but ashes:

Save devagane ucargi āche |
Mane mane Hara gunanta pāche ||
Ki dive āve karo kona karmma |
Gāvara vastra siyo vāgha carmma ||
Hāte laiyā āchaya śūla dambaru |
Ghara bāhire eka guṭi garu ||
Sarpara kinkinī sarpara hāra |
Sakala gāve sarpa alamkāra ||
Sirata āche ardha candrakalā |
Manusyara munde gāthicho mālā ||
Bokandita āche bhasmara dhūli |
Āka dili haibō laghū samūli ||

So, reflecting that a present of any of these articles would only make him an object of ridicule, Siva cleverly disappeared from the assembly.

There are rare flashes of description, realistic characterisation, and unforgettable phrases. We recall such a description of the city of Kundina:

Kuṇḍina nagara Nānā vidha ghara Kato gṛha āche Yena śukla giri Vicitra kaṣaṭi Tāte nānā paṭa Bāgha ghoṅga Aneka putali L. 12

ati manohara
ati uccatara sāji śuddha kāce āche śārī śārī kāṭi śilākuṭi g ghaṭa naṭa bhaṭa siṅgha nānāvihaṅgama āche hāṭa tuli aṅ

dekhilā Śrī Gopāla |
parama cāru caucāla ||
upare ratanara kāma |
dekhibāka anupāma ||
gṛhara bāndhilā kāṇṭhi |
prakaṭi gaḍhilā hāṭhi ||
na śārī śārī sājiyāche |
aṅgi bhaṅgi kari nāce ||

sāji dilā bāra kundrāksa dilanta tāta Darpana akara niśesa grha upare kare phata phata Suparnara ahata devara durgama dare caupāsara gada Vairasama drha vaniya loke pravandhe bike nirantara Vicitra bākhara āmoda karaya gandhe |  Agara candana vāse sarvaksana nagari vata cavala kare nana khedi Hāta bāta beri mukutā hīrā pravāla pindhe kini kini Aneka ramanî caru jale ache bhari capa capa kari Asamkhua pukhuri ghāte ghāte khāte khari || bändhiche bäkhare Cârio kăsare

> "Then Gopāla sees Kuṇḍina, a very lovely city, Various houses, so high, extremely well-roofed; Many houses are there looking neat, on them decoration of jewels,

> Like white hills row on row, so lovely to the eye; sculptures made of the best of granite are there; On them they carved various designs and figures of the elephant,

they made tigers, lions, various birds, all in rows. Many figures are there with raised hands and dancing. The walls were made like glasses, with windows. On all the houses shine golden pitchers. All around the city are well-built ramparts. The merchants sell wonderful jewels there. The atmosphere is redolent of agar and sandal. The children of the city play about at the markets and on the roads.

Many of the women are decked in pearls and diamonds. There are innumerable tanks full to the brim with pleasant water.

The banks of the tanks are paved with jewels."

No kāvya is complete without a description of battle scenes. Our poet fulfilled this requirement also by giving an animated description of the battle between Kṛṣṇa and other disappointed suitor-kings of Rukmiṇī. The battle scene abounds in heroic sentiments. Bhīṣmaka tells his son Rukma when the latter was defeated by Kṛṣṇa:

Uțha uțha putra tal era ito marma | Lăja apamāna kṣatriyara kona dharma || Hāriya jinaya keho jiniyā hāraya | Sarvakāle saṃsārata kāro nāhi jaya || "Arise, arise, O son, leave you this humour. A Kṣatriya is never swayed by blame or praise. Victors lose, and losers win, — none in this world is ever victorious."

Balabhadra consoled Rukminī on the defeat of her brother with the following words:—

Erā mana kaṣṭa śoka nakaribā sakhi ||
Kṣetri jāti bhaile hōve hena vyavahāra |
Vivāda lāgile bhāi bhāi cinte māra ||
Dāruṇa kṣartiya jāti henase abodha |
Saṅgrāma lāgile pitāputre kare yuddha ||

"O friend, give up sorrow. A Kṣatriya always fares like this. In fight a brother may oppose a brother. Kṣatriyas are so foolish that in a fight even a son battles against his father."

Throughout the poem scattered in profusion are the familiar phrases and colloquial compounds gathered from the lips of the people. These idioms which may be said to be 'like real language of men' give additional freshness to the kavya and place it far above conventional compositions. Further the poet transformed many a commonplace idea into neat and witty maxims that are even to-day quoted as proverbial expressions. We get such familiar maxims as:—

Jokara mukhata dile cuna |

"The leech collects back before lime".

Kāke bharacile apavitra hove daula |

"Does the temple get desecrated when the crow commits nuisance over it?"

Candrara agata najvalaya tara |

"A star appears dim before the moon".

Mitraka viṣāda dili śatru pāile lāi |

"When one falls out with his friend his enemy gets emboldened".

Yateka kukure kāmora māraya saveo āṭhura nāma | "The dogs always bite below the knee".

Balichalan (Deception on Bali) was written while Sankara was at Pātbāusī. This is in main an adaptation of the well-known episodes of Bali from Book VIII of the Bhāgavata Purāṇa. The poem is permeated all through with the conception of the doctrine of Bhakti, particularly of the dāsya type, i.e. man's attitude towards God as that of a faithful servant. There is also a series of significant sayings which are of great importance as bearing on merits of gifts, hindrances of wealth and riches towards spiritual progress ($\hat{Sri}$ pāile pāve tāka parama āpade), evils of desire, and the merit of contentment arising out of the control of the senses:—

Tinio lokata yata ache dhanya dhana Yata divya nari ache sundari pradhana || Yata divya gharabari vastra alamkara Saveo nupure mana eka lubhiyara Prthu Gaya ādi kari rājā aparyyanta Arthara trşņāra keho napāiteka anta || Saptadvīpā prthivī karilā adhikāra Tathapi trsnara keho napaileka para Indrivaka dami vito nakare akrosa Si si mahā sukhī yito alpate santoşa Asantuşta pranīra nakhande mana dukha Trailokyara lakşmī pāile nāhi tāra sukha || Yehi pave täte maha tusta hove mana Tevese viprara teja bādhe anukşaņa Asantose samaste tejake kare thaya Yena jala pari agni nirvvanaka paya

"All the grains and wealth that are in the three worlds all the women of beauty, all the beautiful houses, clothes and jewels all these do not satiate even one greedy person, Kings innumerable like Prithu and Gaya could not find the limit to their desire for wealth. They conquered the seven-islands of the earth, even then they could not cross the barrier of desire. The one who controls one's senses and has no craving is the one who is really happy and contended with a little. The unsatisfied person has no end to worries; the riches of the three worlds cannot make him happy. The Brahmana who is satisfied with whatever he gets finds himself increasing in spiritual power, Dissatisfaction sucks all his power like water falling on fire and quenching it".

Sankaradeva did not confine himself to Kṛṣṇaite materials alone but wrote also on themes from the Rāmāyaṇa. He rendered the Uttarā Kāṇḍa (last canto) of the Rāmāyaṇa. Mādhava Kandali's Assamese version of the Rāmāyaṇa¹o existed only in five cantos without the first and the last. The Uttarā Kāṇḍa may, however, be called an independent Rāmāyaṇa as most of the incidents of the epic are narrated in this canto through songs sung by Lava and Kuśa in the court of Rāma. Unlike, however, his translation of the Bhāgavata, where the original was faithfully followed as it was considered to be a sacred text, in the Uttarā Kāṇḍa, the fidelity to the original whether in respect of ideal, character or incident, was not the main aim of the translator. Even the central figure of Rāma of Vālmiki's epic is not an epic hero but an incarnation of Viṣṇu.

For in one of the bhanitas Sankara says of Rama thus:

Tumi tribhubaṇa pati tumi jagatara gati |
Tumisi acintya guṇa ananta śakati ||
Prakṛtita antara parama tumi tattva |
Ādi anta nājāniya tomāra mahattva ||
Tumi bhāra harā bāre bāre avatari |
Duṣṭaka daṇḍiyā mahantaka rakṣā kari ||
Tumisi Īśvara surāsure kare seva |
Antata tumisi thākā nathākaya keva ||

"Thou art the Lord of the three worlds, and the way of the universe.

Thou art the unthinkable virtue, unlimited power.

Beyond Prakrti thou art the supreme secret.

One does not know the beginning or the end of Thy glory.

Thou relievest the burden of the world.

incarnating repeatedly, chastizing the wicked and protecting the good. Thou art Iśvara, whom gods and demons reverence. At the last also thou alone stayset and none else".

It is evident that Sankaradeva undertook its rendering to serve the fixed purpose of propagating the Bhakti cult. To give it a Vaisnavite appearance bhanitās are inserted in each section with passionate religious fervour. Thus, one section concludes with the following sermons:—

Šunā sabhāsada Rāmāyaņa pada pātakara dhūmraketu |

 Mādhava Kandali (1400 A.D.) was the earliest translator of the Rāmāyana in Assamese. Apāra samsāra sukhe hove pāra
Rāma nāma bāndhi setu ||
Duṣṭa kāla sarpe savāko daṃśile
bhaila śruti hata budhi |
Rāma nāma ito amṛta vināi

Rāma nāma iţo
nāi nāi mahauṣadhi ||

Yataka pātaka samhāribe pāre Rāmara nāme samprati

Tateka päteka karibe päpīra
Bāpara nāhike šakati ||

Aganika yena trne novāraya

pāpara tenaya nāma

Isi dharma nija mukuti vānijya Pāki bolā Rāma Rāma ||

"Listen, O members of the assembly, to the verses of the Ramayana. These are a terror to sin. One crosses the boundless samsara (world) with ease, if one only makes a bridge of the name of Rama. The wicked snake Time has bitten everyone, one has lost one's wits. Apart from this nectar named Rama no medicine is there now. So many sins can be destroyed by the name of Rāmā, as are it is beyond the means even of the hardest sinner to commit. As grass cannot control fire, so is the case with sin. This is one's own faith, the trade of salvation, Cry aloud, Rāma, Rāma."

Besides each incident of the epic serves as a convenient peg to hang Vaiṣṇavite sermons upon. For example in the concluding section on Lakṣmaṇa Visarjana (Desertion of Lakṣmaṇa) we have the following verses:—

Sunā sabhāsada save Rāmāyaṇa kathā |
Rāma Lakṣmaṇara hena milila avasthā ||
Ito gṛhavāsa sāmānyara kona lekhā |
Svapanara sama nidhi dhana jana dekhā ||

Durghora mrtyuka kiya nākaliya kāche Hena jānā antake kešata dhari āche Aura aruvanta nāhi kālara hātara [Parama bandhava eke Madhavata para Hena jāni diyā Rāma caranāta citta | Karā pāna Rāmanāma parama amrta || * Visaye vilāse nilā ihena janmaka Chāira arthe pore yena jāti candanaka || Mahāratna mani yena sama nāi mūle Tāka salāi āni kācamani pindhe gale || Eke kākamāmsa siyo āhāra kukurara Ati alpe siyo dekhā nuhike vistara || Tāka mahā pravandha kariyā napāi lāga Yadi pāvai āsi tāko āne khoje bhāga || Sehimate vibhava visaya yata sukha Take lagi hova kene Krsnata vimukha ||

"Listen, members of the assemblage, to the story of the Ramayana. Even Rāma and Laksmana fell into this situation, What need to mention the life of ordinary people? Consider as dream all this men and wealth, Do not call Death near. for know you that he has caught you by the hair. No other rescue is there from the clutch of Time, no other great friend than the only Madhava. Therefore, do you meditate on the feet of Rama, Drink the name of Rāma, the supreme nectar. You will find this to be the conclusion of the Vedas. It is Rāma's name which gives one salvation, Matter and luxury have spoiled this life, as one burns white sandal for ashes. In value there is no equal to the great jewel: but the foolish one changes it for glass beads and puts them on his neck. The flesh of the crow which is food of the dog, Little it is, not large in quantity, Even then it is difficult to obtain, and if the dog comes upon it others claim a share. So ugly and mean are the pleasures of the world, Because of them why do you ignore Kṛṣṇa?"

As the Rāmāyaṇa is a kāvya and not a ṣāstra, Śaṅkaradeva allowed greater latitude to embellish the poem with free use of invented materials and he availed himself of the innumerable opportunities for descriptions which the story offers. The abiding interest of the poem lies in abundance of folk elements which at places produce comic effects by exaggeration. The dinner scene where the angry sage Durvāsā with his hungry disciples were entertained by Rāma, though full of domestic realism, is yet humorous through overstatement:

Rsira ākrośa dekhi samkita Rāghave | Annapāna āpuni sājiyā sabāndhave || Agata jogāila āni aneka yatane Dekhi Durvāsāra mahā tusta bhaila mane || Kari paripati pāche śisye same rşi Bhūnjibe lāgilā anna parama harisi || Ghana ksira ksirisā khāilanta lage māne Nadharaya peta pithāpanā parāmāne || Dadhi dugdha ghrta ghole bhaila gandagola Ophandila udara dekhiya yena dhola || Lobhata bhunjanta tathāpito jānţi jānţi Novāranta rākhibe mātante āse bānti || Napānte ušāsa ati olamila ghāra Moi moi peta kato tolanta ugara Tana tana peta kato dhilanta kapina | Dui hatata vai dravya dekhi lage ghina || Khāibe kato napāri karanta hāi phui Namatanta yacante thakanta thiva hui || Dadhi dugdha pañcāmṛte basāileka gāng Ehi mate rsira bhojana bhaila sang ||

"At the sage's greed Rāghava became terrified; Himself preparing food and drink he laid them before the sage.
At this Durvāsā became much delighted.
Condensed milk and butter he ate as much as he could, the pastry and rice pudding were beyond the capacity of his belly, curd, milk, ghee and whey caused a tumult and his belly became inflated like a drum.
Even then did he ate out of greed, he could not keep down what he ate, it came out as he spoke;

he could not breathe, his shoulders hang down, repeatedly did he belch, his belly became so tight that he had to loosen his cloth, the eatables stuck to both his hand so as to look disgusting; being unable to eat further he became restless, he did not respond when more was offered. A river of curd, milk and the five-nectars flow; thus did the feast of the sage came to a close."

The heroes here have lost their original elevated character and been reduced to the status of common men and women of the day. As an instance, Sītā is described in her parting scene as a rustic woman. She reproaches Rāma in an unrestrained language which at places borders on the vulgar. Sankaradeva had some fondness for elaboration and even in pathetic scenes such as Sītā's final departure he seems to have unnecessarily lingered. Sītā indulges in profuse weeping, flings a sermon on brotherly affection at her sons Lava and Kuśa, hugging them to her neck, and utters a long farewell homage to her husband Rāma. As soon as Sītā is carried away in a golden chair Rāma becomes unconscious and suddenly slips down from the throne. The entire assembly burst into tearful lamentations. The scene, on the whole, has taken on a distinct local colour:

Deva rsi save santāpe kāndanta dharite citta napāri | Bhāluka vānara... kānde nirantara mățita pari lotări || Bharata Laksmana vīra Satrughana bhūmita parilā kāndi | Kauśalyā pramukhye muthi hānai hiye Sītā buli rāva bāndhi || Sevakinī yata Sītāra śokata kānde pari lotāpuți Pāila svarga kolā krandanara sito tumbula rolaka uthi ||

"The gods and the sages could not restrain themselves and began to weep out of grief.

The bears and the monkeys wept everywhere rolling on the ground.

Bharata, Lakṣmaṇa, the hero Satrughna fell to the ground weeping.

Kauśalyā and others struck their breasts and cried out: Sītā, Sītā.

All the maids in grief for Sitā rolled on the ground and cried.

The uproar of grief and lamentation reached the sky."

By such descriptions the poet held up before his listeners a pure domestic tragedy full of sorrow, sadness and unrestricted pathos which had an intense appeal to the popular mind. In these descriptions we do not get that calm dignity, intense yet restrained feeling, which pervade the original epic.

SECTION III

SONGS

In two other branches of Assamese literature Sankaradeva was a pioneer and left his distinctive mark, namely in Baragīta¹¹ devotional song, and Ankiyā-nāṭa,¹² one-act play. Both were new literary types in Assamese. These compositions were not couched in homely Assamese as the poems of Kīrtana or the kāvyas. These were written in an artificial speech called Brajabuli, a mixed Maithilī-Assamese language. Such a literary medium was in vogue among the medieval Vaiṣṇavite poets of Bengal, Bihar and Orissa. It is difficult to guess why Sankaradeva made a departure from the popular language of his poems and chose Brajābuli for his devotional lyrics and plays. It is noteworthy that Sankaradeva composed his first Baragīta not in Assam but at Vadarikāśrama during his first pilgrimage (C 1481 A.D.). We quote below the entire song not only for its historical importance, but for its deeper message and true artistic structure:

There are many popular editions of Sankaradeva's Baragitas. 'Śrī Śrī Śankardevara Baragita' edited by Śrī Rajmohan Nath contains copious word and explanatory notes.

^{12.} Plays of Śańkaradeva, Mādhava Deva and Gopāla Deva were first published in one volume in Ańkiyā Nāţ by the Department of Historical and Antiquarian Studies, Gauhati, 1940. Another publication titled Ańkāvalī and edited by Śrī Kaliram Medhi, M.A., Gauhati, appeared in 1950. There are also independent editions of one or two of these plays.

Rāga — Dhanaśrī

Mana meri Rāma caraṇahi lāgu |
Tai dekha nā antaka āgu ||
Mana āyu kṣaṇe kṣaṇe tuṭe |
Dekha prāṇa kona dina chuṭe ||
Mana kāla ajagare gile |
Jāna tileke maraṇa mile ||
Mana niścaya patana kāyā |
Tai Rāma bhaja teji māyā ||
Re mana isava viṣaya dhāndhā |
Kene dekhi nadekhasa āndhā ||
Mana sukhe pāra kaice ninda |
Tai cetiyā cinta Govinda ||
Mana jāniyā Śaṅkare kahe |
Dekha Rāma vine gati nahe ||

"Rest my mind, rest on the feet of Rāma; Seest thou not the great end approaching? My mind, every moment life is shortening, Just heed, any moment it might flee away. My mind, the serpent of time is swallowing: Knowest thou, death is creeping on by inches. My mind, surely this body would drop down, So break through illusion and resort to Rāma. O mind, thou art blind; Thou seest this vanity of things; Yet thou seest not.

Why art thou, O mind, slumbering at ease. Awake and think of Govinda.

O mind, Sankara knows it and says, Except through Rāma, there is no hope." 13

It should be noted that Brajabuli, as a language had lesser uses of compound consonants, a preponderance of vowels and alliterative expressions and these phonetic traits may be said to make it a more suitable medium for lyric compositions. In addition to this flexibility, some element of sacredness was associated with this artificial language, as it was traditionally considered to be the language of Vraja (Vṛndāvana) in which Kṛṣṇa and the Gopīs spoke. This archaic language bearing vocables of fuller feelingtones was employed to "meet requirements which do not arise in ordinary speech" and it immensely succeeded in interpreting the Vaiṣṇavite atmosphere. Śaṅkaradeva was our first great poet to use this artificial language and superb was the use he made of it in his Baragītas and Aṅkiyā nāṭas. For structural models of these Baragītas the Buddhist Caryāpadas may be said to have led the way.

^{13.} From B. Kakati's Sankaradeva.

The Baragitas are far more poetical than the kāvyas, and more passionate even than the ākhyānas of Kīrtana. The growing popularity of music and the requirements of the devotional services made Śańkaradeva compose a large number of Baragitas, the most beautiful prayer-songs in our literature even to-day.

Śańkaradeva's Baragītas¹¹¹ deal chiefly with experiences of religious life, philosophic reflections, the world and morality, poignant introspection of the self, agony of spirit, humility of the self. Some of them are speculative about the nature of God, His relation with man, His compassion, the innate suffering in human existence, the way of liberation and so forth. Others are exhortatory, urging men to 'chant the name of Hari', to 'think of Govinda', 'to rest on the feet of Rāma,' 'to leave the illusory pleasures of the world,' etc. Each one of the Baragītas invariably concludes with a passionate prayer for shelter at the feet of Govinda, and deliverance from this suffering world. The following song in praise of God is an illustrative example:

"Life of the creatures of the world, self-created, Janardana, crusher of Danuja, reliever of suffering, source of joy to the virtuous, joy of joys, delight to Nanda, roamer in the wilds.
Proficient in various sports, outshining the autumnal moon.
Sleeper on the serpent Seṣa, auspicious, destroyer of Keśi.
Clad in yellow robes, indestructible,
Friend to the world, prop of the universe, Mādhava, foe to Madhu, sweet to the sight, destroyer of Mura.
The lotus feet of Keśava
This is desired by Thy servant Śańkara."

^{14.} The term Baragita has a special significance in the Vaisnavite literature of Assam and the songs of Sankaradeva and Madhava Deva are generally considered as Baragitas. The Baragitas are sung at different devotional services known as prasanga which are held at different hours of the day.

Deeply distressed by the fever and fret of life Sankara in some of the psalms expresses a sense of utter weariness in the world of change and sorrow. Thus sings he:

Rāga — Suhāi

Šrī Rāma mai ati pāpī pāmara teri bhāvanā nāi |
Janama cinṭāmaṇi kahe gayo yaice kācaka lāi || Dhruṃ
Divase viṣaya biyākula niši śayane goñāi |
Mane dhana khuji vimohita teri ārati nāi ||
Hṛdaya kamale Hari baiṭhaha cinto caraṇa nā teri |
Karala garala yaca bhojana hāmu amiyā heri ||
Parama murukha hāmu Mādhava eko bhakati najānā |
Dāsa dāsa buli tārahu ehu Sankara bhāṇā ||

"A dire sinner to Śri Rāma, Think I not of Him.
In pursuit of things glasslike,
My precious life I while away.
During the day I pursue worldly pleasures,
Night I pass fruitlessly in sleep.
With agitated mind I search for wealth,
No devotion I know of Thee.
Within my lotus-heart resides Hari,
Yet I meditate not His feet.
Casting away nectar I take poison.
Fool as I am, I know no devotion to Mādhava.
Save Thy slave, O Lord,
Entreats thus Śańkara."

Also in the following:

Rāga — Kedāra

Pāve pari Hari karaho kātari prāņa rākhabi mora | Viṣaya viṣadhara viṣe jarājara jīvana nārahe thora || Dhrum.

Athira dhana jana jivana yauvana athira ehu saṃsāra |

Putra parivāra savahi asāra karabo kāheri sāra ||

Kamala-dala-jala citta cañcala thira nahe tila eka |

Nāhi bhayo bhava bhoge Hari Hari parampada parateka ||

Kahatu Śańkara e dukha sāgara pāra karā Hṛṣikeśa ||

Tuhu gati mati dehu Śrīpati tattva pantha upadeśa ||

"Falling prostrate at Thy feet, O Lord, I make entreaties that thou may preserve my soul. My life has become infected with the venom of the serpent of worldliness. It cannot stand any more. Wealth and family are illusory, So are life, youth, and this our world. Wife and children are all insubstantial, Whom shall I rely upon? This my soul is as fickle As is the water on floating lotus leaves, And never at rest for a moment. Immersed in the enjoyment of worldly pleasures, I feel no direct touch of Thy supreme feet. Śańkara prays: O Hrsikeśa, Steer me safe across this sea of sorrows, O Śripati, Thou art my goal and mind, Give me the doctrine and the way, In the path of spiritual progress."

The senses are a great hindrance, Sankara wants to transcend them and so he prays:

Nārāyaṇa caraṇa karahō gohāri
Viṣaya-vilāsa pāśa chāndi
Indriya mohi ohi vātovāri || Dhruṃ.
Nāsā gandha madhura rasa rasanā |
Śravaṇa vividha dhvani dhāya ||
Nayanā rūpa paraśa tvaca cāhe |
Kāve bhajaho pahu pāya ||
Kāma krodha mada māna moha meri |
Aisava vairī viśāla ||
Śaṅkara kaha pahu tuhu vine nāhi āra |
Sevakapāla Gopāla ||

"O Nārāyaṇa, this prayer do I make at Thy feet: Free me from the shackles of earthly pleasures, and break asunder my senses.

My nostrils crave for smell, and the tongue pines for delicious taste, The eyes look for forms and the touch for flesh. As such, how can I worship the feet of the Lord? Lust, anger, vanity, pride and passion — They are mighty foes.

Sankara says: O Lord, except Gopāla There is none to protect Thy servant."

In this world of illusion, faith, adoration and devotion to Kṛṣṇa or Rāma can only release human beings from death, destruction, and utter ruin. The following hymns describe Śaṅkara's conception of devotion, spirit of humility and self-surrender:

Rāga — Dhanaśrī

Pāmara mana Rāma caraņe citta dehu | Athira jīvana Rāma Mādhavakeri nāma maranaka sambala lehu || Dhrum

Rayaṇī divasa dūra ūvi yūvata ūyata antaka garaji |

Kathi tanupāta milata mati māni Rāma bhajahu sava varaji ||

Aśā pāśa paraśi mānasapaśu
Paḍali bandī beri beri |

Bhava kārāgāra tāraka nāhi āra vine bhakati-rati teri ||

Avaniśi sevahū Rāma parama pahu Rahu hṛdi paṅkaje merā |

Kṛṣṇa kiṃkara bhaṇa Rāma parama dhana maraṇahi saṅga na chorā ||

"O sinful mind, keep thyself at the feet of Rāma. Life is unstable.

As weapon against death,
Take the name of Rāma-Mādhava.
Days, nights and life pass away,
And death approaches with thundering noise.
Thinkest thou of the decay of the body;
Forsake everything and take shelter under Rāma.

104 ASPECTS OF EARLY ASSAMESE LITERATURE

O animal in man's garb, entering the snare of cravings,
You now become a prisoner.
From this prison-world none can rescue you,
Save your own devotion to the Lord.
Devoutly I serve the great lord Rāma;
Let Him reside in my heart.
Rāma is my greatest treasure.
O Lord, leave me not in the grip of death,
Prays the servant of Kṛṣṇa."

The intellect and wisdom cannot qualify one to obtain release from this world unless he possesses true devotion. Sankara therefore says—

Soi soi thäkura moi yo Hari parakāśā |
Nāma dharata rūpa smarata tākeri hāmu dāsā || Dhrum.
Pandite padhe śāstra mātra sāra bhakate liye |
Antara jala phutaya kamala madhu madhukare piye ||
Yāhe bhakati tāhe mukuti bhakate etattva jānā |
Yaice vaņika cintāmaņika jāniyā guņa bakhānā ||
Kṛṣṇa kimkara Śaṅkara kaha bhaja Govindaka pāya |
Sohi paṇḍita sohi maṇḍita yo Hariguṇa gāya. ||

"He is my master through whom light of the Lord manifests itself.

I am His servant who recites His name and cherishes his image in heart.

Like the bee that collects honey from the lotus that blossoms in the heart of water,

The devotee drinks the essence while the pundit merely reads scriptures.

Devotion alone leads to salvation—

a devotee should bear this in mind.

As a merchant knowing well appraises the merits of the best jewel,

So Sankara the servant of Kṛṣṇa says,

Fall thou down at the feet of Govinda and pray.

He who sings the praises of Hari

Is the real pundit and the glorious man."

Some of these songs are allegorical in import:

E bhava gahana vana ati moha pāśe channa tāte hāmu harina berāi | Phandito māyāra pāśe kālavyādha dhāyā āse kāma krodha kurtā khedi khāya ||

Harāilo cetana Hari najāno kimate tari śunite dagadha bhela jīva |

Lobha moha duhu vägha satate nā chāre lāga rākhu rākhu Sadāśiva ||

Paläite nedekho sandhi dine dine dṛhabandī bhaila manda manara yukuti |

Tuvā Hari lāgo goda mora māyāpāśa choda Sankara karaya kākūti ||

"This world is a dense forest, Full of the fetters of desire; And myself, a weakling of a deer, wandering here alone. Time like a hunter, charges me fast. I am entrapped by the fetters of maya. O Hari, I have lost my heart, and know not the way to liberation. Even to think of my lot, I hurn within. Avarice and illusion, the two tigers are following me. Save me. O Thou infinitely good One -I see not the way of escape, And what a misfortune, I am entangled the more, While I am losing the strength of my mind. Sankara takes refuse at Thy feet and entreats Thee! Free him form the fetters of maya."

In some Baragītas we come across descriptions of child Kṛṣṇa, his setting out in the morning to tend cattle with the cowboys, his repartees in the forest to his friends, and returning back in the evening tired and with deep sleep in his eyes. This group of Baragītas is full of pastoral settings resembling very much village scenes of Assam. The human note is not wanting, particularly in the worries and passionate longings of Yaśodā for the safety of her son Kṛṣṇa.

The following Baragīta which describes sorrows and lamentations of the Gopīs when Kṛṣṇa departed for Mathura, is cited as an illustration:—

Rāga-Kalyāna ...

Uddhava Vandho! Madhupuri rahala murāru | Kahe rahaba nāheri ava jīvana vana bhayo bhavana hāmāru || Dhrum.

Yāhe viyoga āgi anga tāvāya tila eku rahaye nā pāri |

Sohi Vraja sūra dūra gayo Govinda diśa daśa divase āndhāri ||

Bhayo maraṇa O hi sehi Hari caraṇaku bichuri rahaya nā pāi |

Dekhata Kālindi giri Virindāvana tanu mana dahaya sadāya ||

Vrajajana jivana bāhuri nāhi āvata hāmāku karatha anāthā.

Gopini prema parasi nīra jhuraya Sankara kaha gunagāthā. ||

"O friend Uddhava,

Murăru chooses to stay away at Madhupuri.
Without seeing him how shall we live?
Our homes now turn to wilderness.
Fire of separation burns our limbs,
We find no peace for a minute even.
Govinda, the sun of Vraja has departed,
So darkness prevails even in day in the ten directions.
Being separated from the feet of Hari
We will perish soon.
The very sight of the Kālindī, Govardhana and Vṛndāvana
Burns ceaselessly our minds and bodies.
Alas! the life of Vraja shall not return,
Putting us in utter helplessness.
In love, the tears roll down the cheecks of the Gopīs.
Sankara sings the praises of the Lord."

The following hymn in beautiful imagery has a deeper note of pathos: --

Tāla-ekatāla

Mādhava virahe haraya cetana |
tanu jīvana na rahe || Dhrum.
Canda candana manda malaya samīre |
Keśava vine viṣa variṣe śarīre ||
Ghana ghana hānaya madana pañca vāṇa |
Kokila kuhu kuhu lohu meri prāṇa ||
Paṃkayapāta ahita himabāri |
Madhukara nikara karaya mahāmāri ||
Aicana samaye Madhupuri piu prāṇa |
Kṛṣṇa kiṃkara rasa Śaṅkara bhāṇa ||

"Benumbed are our senses at separation from Mādhava. Life does not seem to keep well with the body. The moon, sandal-paste and the cooling Malaya wind, rain poison on us.

For we are bereft of our beloved Keśava.

Again and again Madana shoots his five arrows, And the cuckoo takes our life with its exciting cooing. Lotus-leaves and cold water turn harmful, Bees come in cluster bringing great destruction to us. Alas! even at such a time our beloved, our very life, stays at Madhupuri. Sankara, the servant of Kṛṣṇa. expresses such sentiments."

In the Baragitas we find Sankaradeva in his exalted moments. Here he exhibited his power of fusing philosophical thought with lyrical feelings. He blended in these song-poems lofty thoughts with splendid rhythmic felicities and artistic expressions. Numerous are the similes, metaphors, alliterations and other figures of speech which make them enjoyable and appealing. The popularity of Baragitas grew rapidly and a large number of such song-poems were composed by later poets. Among these writers women also come into the picture. The best compositions are, however, from Mādhava Deva, who himself was a master musician.

Another type of Sankaradeva's poetry is known as Catihā. During his pilgrimage at Banaras Sankaradeva met some disciples of Kabir and was charmed with Kabir's Cautisā verses. The Cautisā is an exposition of the religious significance of the consonants of the alphabet. Just as in Chaucer's "A.B.C." the verses begin with the successive letters of the Latin alphabet, the lines in this form of composition begin with the successive letters of the Sanskrit alphabet. Their reproduction in Assamese resulted in the Catihās.

SECTION IV

DRAMA

The Aṅkiyā-nāṭas were composed mainly to appeal to the eye, the ear as well as to the mind of the common people. These plays exercised a tremendous influence on our national and cultural life; they led to the growth of the popular stage, and development of music and dancing. The drama represents a spectacle and the appeal of the spectacular in an age when printing was unknown, was profound. Although first used mainly as a means of furthering the cause of Assamese Vaiṣṇavism by their spectacular appeal to the people at large, these plays have come to exercise an abiding influence on our common folk to this day. They inspired our poetry and led to the creation of a special type of descriptive poem called Bhatimā. Further in the Aṅkiyā-nāṭas we find our first prose, a prose rhythmic in form, and full of elevated and musical expressions.

Of Śańkaradeva's dramas Kāli Damana¹⁵ (Subjugation of the serpent Kāli) composed at Bardovā about 1518 A.D., Patnī Prasāda (Favour to the wives) written about 1521 A.D. at Dhuvāhāṭā, Rāsa Kṛidā or Keli Gopāla, (1540 A.D.), Rukmiṇī Haraṇa (Abduction of Rukmiṇī), Pārijāta Haraṇa (Stealing of the flower Pārijāta) and Rāma-Vijaya (Conquest of Rāma), the last composed at Cooch Behar sometime in 1568 A.D.¹⁶ at the request of the king Naranārāyaṇa, are now extant.¹⁷ The subject-

15. Tradition says that the first play produced by Sankaradeva was Cinha Yātrā. His biographers have left detailed account of the first performance of this drama, where painted scenes were used, masks were worn and dance preponderated.

16. Śrīgópālapadacchatrechāyālālasamānasaḥ | Śukladhvajanrpa etat kārayāmāsa nāṭakam || Vindurandhravedacandraśāke Śańkara—samjňakaḥ | Śrīrāmavijayo nāma nāṭakam vidadhedhunā || Rāmavijaya or Sītāsayamvara is the last work of Śańkaradeva.

 He is said to have written another play named Janma Yātrā, which is now not extant.

matter of the first three plays was drawn mainly from the Bhagavata. Rukmiņī Haraņa and Pārijāta Haraņa are adaptations respectively from Hari Vamsa and Visnu Purāna, the story of Rāma Vijaya is taken mainly from the Rāmāyaṇa. The stories of all these plays, however, have a happy ending. In subject-matter, technique and purpose of the plays Sankaradeva had to work under certain limitations. The story of each play was pre-determined and fixed; in presentation emphasis had to be given on the propaganda side rather than on artistic representation. The author here is a preacher first and artist afterwards. So he selected the episodes that served his purpose best. Nevertheless, even under these limitations, in some of his plays particularly in Rukminī Harana, Pārijāta Harana and Rāma Vijaya, effective characterisation is noticeable; and even in a small canvas the main characters stand out in clear relief. In Rāma Vijaya, when Rāma returned from Mithila in the company of Daśaratha, Sīta and Laksmaņa, the party met on the way Paraśu Rāma. Paraśu Rāma was angry at Rāma for his breaking the bow of his master Siva. Paraśu Rāma bit his own shoulders in rage and challenged Rama to a trial of strength. This intense excitement of the situation is powerfully suggested by the words of the Sūtradhāra and the speeches of Paraśu Rāma. The words of Daśaratha, who sought the sage's forgiveness for his son are full of parental love and solicitude. Dasaratha entreated:-

He Paraśurāma prabhū, hāmāra putra Rāmacandra bālakamati | Ihāka dosa maraşa gosāi, tohāri caraṇaka dāsa bhelo | māthe khera dharo hāmāka putradāna dehu | Java nāhi kṣamā karaba, tava putraka cori hāmāra māthā lehu |

"O Lord Paraśurāma, my son Rāmacandra is a child. Forgive him. I fall a slave at thy feet. With straw on my head I beg the safety of my son. If thou canst not forgive my son, then in exchange take thou my head."

The characters of Pārijāta Haraṇa have fine human touches. Nārada, the quarrell-maker, had one day presented a Pārijāta flower to Kṛṣṇa which Kṛṣṇa in his turn gave to Rukmiṇī who was then waiting upon her husband. The news was immediately carried by Nārada to Satyabhāmā. Satyabhāmā's jealousy was aroused at the fortune of her co-wife. She burst into a hysteric fit and became indifferent to her food and drink. Nārada again went to Kṛṣṇa and apprised him of the situation. Kṛṣṇa hurriedly went inside to comfort her. Satyabhāmā chided her husband with harsh words till Kṛṣṇa agreed to uproot the whole Pārijāta tree from Indra's garden and transplant in Satyabhāmā's palace. Satyabhāmā accompanied Kṛṣṇa on this expedition to Amarāvatī. While Kṛṣṇa was about to uproot the tree, which act was being obstructed by the keepers of the garden, an amusing battle of words ensued between Satyabhāmā and Śacī, Indra's wife. We take at random a snatch of their conversation:

Sacī:

Āve Satyabhāmā, tohāri svāmī Mādhavaka kathā hāmu sava jāni | Ohi Gopī-viṭāla Gopāla | Unikara āgu Gakulaka stri nahi rahala | Dekhu Kaṃsaka dāsi Kubuji tāhaka hāta edāvala nāhi | Tāheka āra ki kahava | Aisana anācāri Kṛṣṇaka garava kavekahŏ hāmaka Pārijāta niyā jāya | Ah vajrapāte savaṃse nāśa bheli | Jānava | *****

Satyabhāmā:

Ave Indrāni, Jagataka parama guru hāmara svāmī |
Jāhera nāma sumarite mahā mahā pāpīsava samsāra nistare | tāheka atave nindā karaha | Āve nilājinī marite
najāna | Tohāri svāmī Indraka kathā kahite ghṛnāse
upaje | Dekho Amarāvatika yata veśyā tohāka svāmika
se nāhi anṭala | Tohāri svāmī kayali ki | Gautama ṛṣka bhāryā Ahalyā tāheka māyākarikahu jāti bhraṣṭa
kayala | Tannimitte sava śarīra dhāki jonidaka bhela |
Āve pāmari aisana Indraka hāmāka āgu vakhānaha | *****

Śaci speaks:

O you Satyabhāmā, I know well of your husband Mādhava, a cowherd who did mischief to the Gopīs. The women of Gokula had no escape from him. Even the hunch-backed maid of Kamsa could not save herself from him. What more should I say? To such a Kṛṣṇa, I emphasize this: you are stealing my Pārijāta blossoms. You would be exterminated along with your line, I am quite sure.

Satyabhāmā retorts:

Well Indrani, know that the lord of the world is my husband; the mere contemplation of his name liberates great sinners from worldly life. How do you dare to speak ill of him? O you shameless one, do you not know how to die? To refer to your husband Indra gives me disgust. Look, even the harlots of Amarāvatī could not bring satisfaction to Indra, and see what he did? Ahalyā, the holy wife of Gautama was polluted by a device of magic. It is for this the person of your husband was covered with a thousand marks of disgrace. You low-bred woman, you extol this Indra before me?

These characters, though classical, do not reveal in their speech, demeanour and action any trace of the dignity and grandeur of the original. In reality they represent the rustic women of the author's time. Again both in Rukmini Harana and Rāma Vijaya, Śańkaradeva introduced a few love scenes probably to suit the requirements of the illiterate audience.

A noteworthy characteristic of these plays is that in them verses greatly preponderate and the author uses them to further the progress of the play. Situations and incidents, at places, instead of being represented through action and character are suggested by the mere machinery of descriptive verses put into the mouth of the Sūtradhāra. Most of the minor incidents, and feelings, sentiments, even of the major characters are displayed through songs. Thus in Rāma Vijaya Rāma's adventures with the Rākṣaṣī Tārakā, while Rāma was on his way to the hermitage of Kausika, and later the scenes of sacrifice where he killed the Rāksasas such as Subāhu and Mārīca in the hermitage of Kauśika, are effectively recited in songs and not shown in action. Again in Rukmini Harana such incidents as Rukmini's entreaties to Krsna to save her brother's life, the bridal procession of Kṛṣṇa and Rukmiṇī to Dvārakā and the gay picture of the marriage are recounted only in songs. The use of dance is another device by which the story is unfolded to the audience. The dialogue and characterisation are very thin and feeble in such dramas as Patnī Prasāda, Rāskrīdā and Kāli Damana. Their stories are chiefly described by the Sūtradhāra in prose and verse. Unlike as in Sanskrit plays, the Sūtradhāra is an integral part in an Anleiyā drama and he remains all along on the stage. He opens the play, introduces the characters, gives them directions, announces their exist and entrance on the stage, fills up lacunae in the action of the play by song, dance and speeches, and lectures wherever any opportunity arises on the ethical and spiritual points of the plot.

112

The Bhatimas of the plays serve mainly as epilogues and prologues. Some are, however, of the nature of panegyric poetry. The Bhatimā recited by the Sūtradhāra in Rāma Vijaya unfolds before us the top-knot beauty of Sītā and is very impressive :-

> Ki kahaba rupa kumarika Rama Kanaka putali tula tanu anupama || Ratana tilaka lola alaka kapola | Heriye bhrubhanga tribhuvana bhola || Dekhiya badana canda bheli laja | Nayana nirikhi kamala jala majha || Heriye bhujayuga milala ucanka Lalita mrnāla majala jala panka || Ārakata karatala muni mana moha Kanaka śalakā anguli karu śoha || Banduli nindi adhara karu kānti || Dādimba nivida vīja danta pānti | Isata hasita madana moha jāi | Nāsā tilaphula kamalinī māi || Nava yauvana tana badari pramāņa || Uru karikara kati dambaruka thana || Pada pankaja nava pallava panti | Campaka pākari ānguli karu kānti || Nakhacaya cāru cānda parakāśa Lahu lahu mattagajagamana vilāsa || Kata lāvanu vihi niramala jāni | Kokila-nāda amiya jhure vānī ||

"O Rāma, how to describe the beauty of the princess? Her figure is like an exquisite image of gold. There is the jewelled mark on her forehead with tresses hanging down. At the sight of her demeanour the three worlds are entranced, the sight of her face shamed the moon, the sight of her eyes sent the lotus down into the deep. Seeing her arms the graceful lotus stalk disappeared under the mud. Her palms are so red that they absorb the attention even of sages. Her fingers shine as gold sticks. Her cheeks outshine the Banduli flower. The rows of the teeth are as thick as the seeds of the pomegranate. Her slightly smiling face enthrals even the god of love. The sweet maid's nose is the blossom of the sesamum; with fresh youth her breasts grow to the size of plums. Her thighs are like the trunk of an elephant; her waist like a damaru. Her feet are like a row of fresh leaves; her fingers gleam like Campaka petals. The nails look like the moon, Her slow movement resembles, the majestic steps of an elephant. So much sweetness the creator could make! Her words stream like delicate notes of the cuckoo."

For technique, Śańkaradeva's indebtedness to Sanskrit dramatic theory is complete. He utilized in the Ankiyā dramas nāndī, benediction, prastāvanā, prologue and epilogue. Prologue and epilogue described as Bhaţimā are in Assamese verse; nāndī verses are in Sanskrit.

We quote the following extract from Kāli Damana to illustrate Sankaradeva's skill in Sanskrit verse compositions, 18 use of songs and prose, and specimen of dramatic technique followed in his plays, 19

Kāli Damana

Śrikṛṣṇāya namah

Śloka

Meghasyāmalamūrtimāyatamahābāhum mahôraḥsthlam Āraktāyatakañjalocanayugam pītāmbaram sundaram | Muktāhīrakahemahāravalayālamkārakāntidyutim Kṛṣṇam śārada-sāndracandrasadṛsamhṛd paṅkajehambhaje ||

Api ca:

Yenākāri mahāhidarpadalanam krīdā hradinyā jale Yenābhāji bhujangabhoganikhilam padbhyām mudā mardditam ||

Yenāmāri mahāmahāsuracamūcakram param līlayā
Tasmai- śrīkarunāmayāya mahate Krsnāya nityam namah ||

Sūtradhāra — Uhi prakāre Śrīkṛṣṇaka paraṇāma kayakāhô, sabhāsada lokaka sambodhi bola

18. Sanskrit influence is overwhelming in the plays; and verses written in Sanskrit are interspersed all through them. For these plays Śańkaradeva himself wrote about one hundred and eighty stanzas in Sanskrit in diverse metres.

 Further, this citation may help scholars in the comparative study of the development of dramatic literatures in other Modern Indian languages also,

114

Śloka

Bho bhoh samajika yuyam srnudhvam sraddhayadhuna || Kṛṣṇasya kālidamana-yātrā-vārtām nibodhata ||

Sūtradhāra - Āhe sabhāsada loka, ye parama purusôttama sanātana Nărāyana Śrī Śrī Kṛṣṇa uhi sabhāmadhye kālidamana līlā yātra20 parama kautuke karaba | tāhe sāvadhāne dekhaha śunaha | Nirantare Haribola Hari.

Bhatimā

Jaya jaya yadukula kamala prakāśaka nāśaka kamsaka prāņa Jaya jaya jagataka bhakataka bhīti nitikara nirajāna Jaya jaganāyaka mukti däyaka sāyaka śārangadhārī | Dusta Aristaka mustika modala Codala bandhu Murări || Dharu Govardhana bārana barikhana bheli Indramada dūra Tribhuvana kampaka kāli sarpaka darpaka kayali cura || Nandaku nandana vandana devaka sevaka yākeri sarbba Gopamukhe anna māgala bhāngala dviya nijakarma garbba || Gökula jana yata tāraka māraka kuvalaya Dhenuka nāśi Putanikā tana śôsala tosala mana vrajavāsī | E dukha dahaka pāvaka bhāvaka pūrala puna manakāma Jagajana jātaka pätaka ghātaka yākeri e guņa nāma Yāhe bhakati rakati śakati tārala uha samsāra |

Kīţa patangama jangama sangama bhakataka pāi nistāra ||

Sõhi Kṛṣṇaka uhi nāṭaka uhi nāṭaka utpātaka dukha mūla |

Kalimala anala jänala mänala nähi nähi uhi tula

Šuna sava lõi hoi nõi dekhahu vacana bicāri |

Iha saṃsāra sāra nāhi āra cintahu caraṇa Murāri ||

Brahmā Maheśvara cākara yākara tākara guņa muha lehu |

Bāndhava Mādhava sādhava mukuti tāhe caraņe citta dehu ||

Uhi Iśvara tāraka māraka kāraka save samsāra |

Tāhe karu seva devaka deva nāhi nāhi Hari vine āra ||

Yataye paramā dharamā karamā savakahu rājā nāma |

Kṛṣṇaka kinkara Śaṅkara kahu save bolahu rāmā rāmā ||

Sūtradhāra — Āhe sabhāsada loka, ye jagataka parama guru parama puruṣa puruṣottama sanātana Brahmā Maheśa sevita caraṇa pamkaja Nārāyaṇa Śrī Śrī Kṛṣṇa uhi sabhāmadhye Kāli Damana nāma līlā yātrā kautuke karaba tāhe sāvadhāne dekhaha śunaha | Nirantare Haribola Hari || (Ākāśaka karṇa diyā) Āhe Sangī, kona vādya śuniye |

Sangi - Sakhi, mṛdanga vamsīdhvani śuni | Āḥ milala milala ||

Śloka

Govatsan puratah krtva gopalah palakah satam Sabham pravivesa gopala saha venum ninadayan ||

Sūtradhāra—Āhe sāmajika loka hāmu ye kahala sohi Iśvara Śrī Gopāla vatsapāla sahite ethā praveška hu yaice līlā kautuka karaba tāhe dekhaha śunaha | Nirantare Haribola Hari ||

Gita

Rāga Sindhurā, Ekatālī

Avata e kāņu surabhi carāi | Rañjita dhenu reņu veņu bajāi || Dhrum

Pada

Šire šikhandaka gandakundala dolāve | Ure hemahāra hīrā mañjira jurāve || Bālaka bedhi kheli khelaite yāya | Kahatu Sankara gati Govinda pāya ||

Sūtradhāra — Aisana līlā keli kautuke nṛtya karite Gopāla sahite śiśusava Kālihradaka samīpa pāvala | Se viṣamaya pānī nājāni parama piyāse pīḍita huya savahū hradara jala udara bhari pāna karala | Tattakāle dorghora viṣajālā pānīye cetana harala | Śarīra kampi kampi prāṇa cāri vatsa vatsapālasava kālindi tīre parala |

Śloka

Vatsakān pālakān Kṛṣṇo vilokya mṛtakān tadā | Cakāra pracuram khedam adbhutam bhaktavatsalah ||

Sūtradhāra — Tadantare vatsa vatsapāla savaka viṣajala pāne mṛtaka pekhi Śrī Kṛṣṇa hā hā ki bheli buli dharikahū ulata pālata kari dekhala | Nirantare prāṇa marala | | 21

SECTION V

INFLUENCE ON CONTEMPORARY POETS

It is true that the Vaiṣṇavite movement gave a tremendous impetus to the development of Assamese literature in various directions but to the personality and the genius of Sankaradeva it added fresh lustre. Sankaradeva was himself the source of infinite inspiration to his contemporary writers.²² His devout disciple Mādhava Deva, another literary illumni of the time, composed songs²³ and dramas at the suggestion of his guru. The incident ^{21.} Up to this point the Sūtradhāra dominates the play. He recites the Nāndī Śloka, unfolds the prastāvanā, sings the Bhatimā song, introduces the characters and goes on narrating incidents of the play both with songs and dances. This is true, more or less, of all the plays of Śańkaradeva.

^{22.} Kathā Gurucarita, p. 97.

^{23.} Kethā Gurucarita, pp. 165, 209, 213.

relating to the commission for compilation of Namaghosa or Hājārī Ghoṣā by Mādhava Deva, a book of philosophical verses is described in Kathā Guru Carita in a graphic manner.24 Mādhava Deva undertook the translation of Visnupuri Sannyasi's Bhakti Ratnāvali, and composed the kāvya Rājasūi25 at the request of Sankaradeva. Tradition goes so far that the first couplet of each of the texts of Nāmaghosā and Bhakti Ratnāvalī was composed by Śańkaradeva as a mark of loving admiration for his disciple. Rāma Sarasvatī, another voluminous contemporary writer undertook to render the Mahābhārata at the suggestion of Śankaradeva.36 His indebtedness to Sankara was very great. An interesting episode is recorded as to the translation of some sections of Book X of the Bhagavata Purana by the Brahmana Ananta Kandali. In a dream Ananta Kandali was directed to partake of the remains of Sankara's food and when the Brahmana asked Sankara for it the latter refused to offer, but instead entrusted Ananta Kandali with the rendering of the remaining sections of Book X of the Bhagavata Purana, which Sankara himself previously undertook to translate. Most of the other poets of the different Books of the Bhagavata were either directly commissioned by Sankaradeva or inspired by his immediate disciples to undertake the translations. Govindacarana Dvija who rendered Book III of the Bhāgavata acknowledged clearly his indebtedness to Sankaradeva and to Sankara's disciple Damodara Deva in the following verse:

Amāra bāndhava bandhu Srīmanta Saṅkara |
Tehe viracila pada Śrī Bhāgavatara ||
Si sava kathāka āmi mane ādarilo |
Si kāraņe samkṣepiyā pada viracilo ||

Sărvabhauma Bhattacharya, another well-known Brāhmaṇa scholar himself tells us that he resided at Prāgjyotiṣapura where he was known as a devout Śākta. He entered into a long discussion with Śaṅkaradeva about the merits of the two forms of Vaisnava and Śākta worship and getting defeated in dispute he left for Banaras for study under a teacher Bisweswar Chakravarti. After five years of close study, he became, as he tells us, well versed in śāstras. At Banaras he made up his mind to become a worshipper of Hari and on his return he at once turned to ^{24.} Ibid, p. 218.

^{25.} Kathā Gurucarita, p. 205.

^{26.} B. Kakati: Purani Asamiya Sahitya, p . 21.

Sankara and became one of his disciples (Sankaraka guru māni śaraņa pašila). Afterwards at the inspiration of Śankaradeva, Sārvabhauma rendered into Assamese certain sections of the Padma Purāṇa.

It would indeed be a long list to mention the names of Śrīdhara Kandali, Śiṣṭa Bhattāchāryya and a host of other poets of the period who were indebted in various ways to Śańkaradeva.

SECTION VI

LANGUAGE AND LITERARY FORMS

After this brief summary no separate treatment seems necessary about the dominant motif of Sankaradeva's literature. His literature was meant chiefly to serve practical purposes in the Vaiṣṇavite movement. Sankarite literature in tone, colour and form, appears predominantly to be religious and, therefore, suffers from certain limitations. Nevertheless there are magnificent and inspired utterances that have a universal appeal and touch every human heart. In many of such passages philosophy, morals, rules of conduct are given not only to his age but for all ages.

We have already noticed that Nature too has some place in Sankaradeva's writings. In fact, the brilliant descriptions of Nature were largely instrumental in rendering many of his religious verses real gems of lyrical poetry. The poet took rapturous delight in lingering over the description of the beauties of rivers, oceans, groves, forests, and mountain scenery. He portrayed them as they presented themselves to his eyes, and did not project his own feelings and sentiments into them. Although not attempting to discover any spiritual message he saw in her glory and manifestation of the creator. Take his famous passages from Divya Upavana in the Haramohana or the Citrakūta in Gajendra Upākhyāna. Each one of them exhibits the author's delicate observation of Nature and unfolds a colourful landscape.

To judge Sankaradeva, it is necessary to say a word about his use of language, verse forms and other literary embellishments. It has already been said that in Baragitas and Ankiyā dramas Sankaradeva used a kind of mongrel dialect known as Brajabuli. His other verse compositions were, however, in simple and racy Assamese as his mission was to educate the common men with great ideas. The Assamese language was born out of Māgadhi Prākrit and the influence of Prākrit abundantly lingered in his vocables and phonology. Moreover, this led to confused forms and varied vocabularies. In his language we find simplification of conjoint consonants, omission in certain words even of the intervocalic consonants, reduction of aspirates to h, change of y into j, lengthening and shortening of vowels for metrical exigencies, less use of compounds (samāsa) and special knack for spontaneous nasalisation. Cases of confusion are commonly seen in t and t, s and s; n and n, l and r, r, and ri. s

Assamese was still then in its formative stage. So it forced the poet to invent new words or to coin new forms and idioms, more effective than the existing old words. His catholic mind prompted him to borrow words unhesitatingly from Perso-Arabic vocables. In verse forms, Sankaradeva followed his great master Mādhava Kandali and adopted the traditional and standard metres Pada, Dularī, Chavi, Jhumurā, etc, with masterly metrical skill.

We have already noticed that Sankaradeva was an erudite scholar in Sanskrit and he drank deep into the Sanskrit literature. Besides, borrowing materials for his kāvyas and plays from the Vedas, the Upaniṣadas, the Rāmāyaṇa, the Mahābhārata, the various Purāṇas and the Tantra-texts, Sankaradeva composed ślokas and stotras even in Sanskrit. Further, he compiled an anthology of Sanskrit verses on Vaiṣṇavite faith and philosophy. The title of the text is Bhakti Ratnākara; and it contains near about forty sections relating to diverse topics on Vaiṣṇavism. The verses of the book were collected from such works as the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, Prabodha Candrodaya Nāṭaka, Sānti Sataka of the Kasmir poet Sihlana, Vaiṣṇavānanda Lahari and Yogasāra.

In literary conventions, modes, figures of speech also Sankaradeva closely adhered to the canons of the Sanskrit poetics and followed the classical traditions. Most of the imageries, expressions, ideas used in his poetry were drawn from the inexhaustible source of Sanskrit poetry; as for instance the comparison of the

It is difficult to say something definite on phonology for different manuscripts reveal different phonological peculiarities.

^{28.} The manuscript is now being edited for publication by Pandit Manoranjan Sastri. Nalbari loveliness of a body to the flash of lighting (vijuli reha) or burnt gold (tapta suvarna), the thighs to trunks of an elephant (karikara), or stems of plantain, the neck to a conch (kambukantha), the arms to rounded body of a serpent (valita bhujanga), the forearms to lotus stalk (mrnāla danda), fingers to the petals of campaka flower (campaka pāpari), or sticks of gold (kanaka śalakhā), an eye to a new lotus petal or a cakovā bird, the eyebrows to Cupid's bow, the side long glance to Cupid's arrow, face to moon, nose to a sesamum flower, redness of the lips to a banduli flower or a ripen bimba fruit, the well formed teeth to rows of pearls or seeds of a pomegranate, breasts to badari fruits or ample jars, movements to swan's (Rājahamsa), elephant's (gajagati) or to lion's (mṛgarāja), voice to cuckoo and hundreds of such stereotyped comparisons. Among various figures of speech alliteration which goes to create impression with different sounds and marvellous melody is seen all through his poetry. Repetition of the same syllable in the following Baragita presents a brilliant example of alliteration while describing march of Rāma's army to Lankā: -

Rāga: Aśovārī

Suna suna re sura vairī pramāņā nisācara nāša nidānā |

Rāmanāma yama samaraka sāji samadale kayali payānā || Dhrum

Thāṭa prakaṭa paṭu kauṭi kauṭi kapi giri garagara pada ghāve |

Bāridhi tari tari kare gurutara giri--dhari dhari samaraka dhāve ||

Hāṭa ghāṭa vahu vāṭa viyapi
Caugade vedhali Lankā |

Guru ghana ghana ghosa gharisana garjjana Śravane janamaye śańkā ||

Dhīra vīra sura sekhara Rāghava Rāvaṇa tuvā pari jhāmpe |

Sura nara kinnara phanadhara tharathara Mahīdhara tarasi prakampe ||

Andha mugudha daśakandha pāpabudha jānakīka śirata carāi |

Raghūpati pada-vara dhara rajani cara Sankara kahatu upāi || "Listen, O people, listen, the destroyer of demon enemies, the cause of destruction of the rākṣasas.

He whose name is Rāma, marches out to the fierce battle accompanied by his hosts.

Millions are the monkeys skilled in the show of fight, the hills shaking at the strike of their feet.

Crossing the sea they take hills and mountains in hand and rush to the battle-field.

Spreading over streets and market places they encircle Lanka. Every now and then is heard noise like that of claps of thunder and the clash of clouds, so that it strikes the listener with fear.

Steady, chief among heroes, is Rāghava—
Rāvaṇa, on you he does leap!

Gods, men, kinnaras, serpents—all shake—the mountains quake in terror.

O you blind and fatuous ten-headed one you of misguided intelligence,
Take Jānakī on your head and take her back,
O you night prowler, take to the shelter of Raghūpati—this is the means (of saving yourself) given by Śańkara."

In the following verses, to illustrate how strong is the desire for pleasures of the senses, several forceful illustrations are set down:

Vişayara duḥkha jāni tathāpito eko prāņī nede dunāi tāke bhuñji mare |

Galata bāndhiyā pāghe kātibāka nenta chāge yena nilarjjatā āti kare ||

Aneka bhatsani pāi ucchişţa bhūñjibe yāi yena ati kukura niṛgate |

(Śrikṛṣṇara Vaikuṇṭha Prayāṇa)

"Worldliness is unhappiness.
Creatures know this.
Yet none forsakes it, rather all run after it again.
Like a goat which behaves disgracefully
Even when led to the altar for sacrifice, roped by the neck.
Or like a shameless dog though uninvited and vehemently chid come to partake of the remains of a feast."

Of the figures of sense, similes of various types are a very favourable device and are frequently employed to elaborate an idea. Sometimes series of similes run through a stanza to impress one and the same fact again and again. To suggest Sisupala's undeserving desire to marry Rukminī, no less than a dozen similes are piled up together:

Moka vihā karibāka āila Sisupāla Mora māne teveto jīvana bhaila bhāla || Tāhāra ki mukhe moka vihāibāka pāre Simhara bharyaka yena śrgala ahare || Hāta mele candraka chavāla yena range Amrtaka icchā kare cukare kona benge || Sehimate āśā Śiśupālara āmāka Yena jañja bhāgaka bhuñjibe cāve kāka || Māhādāna khoje yena patita brāhmana Višista svargaka vancai brahmavadhi jana || Sehimate āśā Śiśupāla nrpatira Tāra mukhe svāmī huibe pāibe Rukminīra || Trailokyara nätha mädhavaka eri yäi | Kone Śiśupālaka varibe caksu khāi || Simha eri sukaraka khoje kona pranī Dugdha eri kona jane piye mācho pānī ||

"(Rukminī says) This Siśupāla comes to marry me: my life has taken a better turn indeed! With what cheek has he come to marry me? As a fox would feed on the female of the lion, as a baby would snatch at the moon, as the frog from the corner would desire for nectar, so would Siśupāla desire me. As the crow would feed on the offerings made at a yajña, as the degraded Brāhmaṇa would covet great gifts, as the Brāhmaṇa-slayer would desire for the high heaven, so would king Siśupāla desire me. He talks of being husband to Rukmiṇī. But setting aside Mādhava, the Lord of the three worlds, who would shut one's eyes and choose Siśupāla? What man would ignore the lion and ask for the pig? Who would ignore milk and drink fish-washing water?"

He is also rich in other alamkāras such as Rūpaka, Utprekṣā, Vyājastuti, Arthāntaranyāsa, Svabhāvokti, etc. Another literary skill which made Śańkaradeva's writings acceptable to the popular mind is the use of proverbs in surprising numbers. These pithy sayings, racy of the soil, are used to illustrate facts of ordinary life, moral precepts and the wisdom of the common man.

It cannot be denied that Sankaradeva had great fondness for repetition. We come across frequent repetitions of imagery, expressions, sermons, refrains, incidents and even set descriptions. As rightly pointed out by L. N. Bezbarua, many passages of Kirtana occur in Daśama and agree verse by verse, sometimes only with slight variations. The Bhatimas of the plays Rukmini Harana and Rāma Vijaya describing the beauties of Kṛṣṇa and Rukmiṇī, Rāma and Sītā, are identical both in ideas and expressions. But whatever be the merits or limitations of Sankaradeva's writings, they have been for the last five centuries a source of delight, inspiration, consolation and wisdom to the Assamese people. In his own age Sankaradeva was acclaimed as a master poet, and his compositions became the model and criterion of poetic excellence during the succeeding generations. We honour him for greatly developing the resources of the Assamese language, for widening the imaginative range of Assamese literature and for raising it to classical elegance and richness by imparting into it what is good and beautiful in Sanskrit. In the significant expression of Mādhava Deva, we may say that "formerly the streams of love-nectar flowed only within the confines of Heaven, until Sankara came and breached the embankments; and lo! now it flows tumultuous through all the world." Despite a change of outlook, shifting of ideals, and birth of new literary forms, Sankaradeva's literature has come to stay with us as a standard and measure of great poetry. Even today his Ankīyā plays are acted, the Baragītas are sung and the kāvyas are read with enthusiasm. We treasure them as a part of our national, cultural and spiritual heritage.

EARLY ASSAMESE PROSE

BY

B. K. BARUA

I. Prose of the Ankiya Natas

Though recorded literature in Assamese began as early as the twelfth century A.D. prose came to it very much later. The earliest specimens of Assamese literature are written in songs and verses. Verse was employed even in subjects which were definitely nonpoetical in nature. Even subjects like astronomy, medicine, arithmetic got a versified treatment. The use of prose was, however, first found in the Ankiya plays of Śankaradeva. dialogues of these plays Śankaradeva employed a mongrel dialect called Brajabuli. Though originally sprung from the Maithili, Brajabuli may be called a sub-Assamese language for it was nurtured and nourished by Assamese poets and writers. In the middle ages Assamese scholars used to visit the various centres of learning in northern India for education and pilgrimage. In those days, Mithila was a noted centre of Vaisnavite learning, Scholars and devotees who visited Mithila from Assam studied not only scriptures but also learnt the songs of Maithili poets like Vidyāpati and Umāpati. In imitation of these popular songs the Assamese poets were tempted to compose songs, verses and plays in a mixed Assamese-Maithili speech.

In structure, the Ankiyā Nāṭas are dramas no doubt, but in content they are nothing but a combination of songs and lyrics put in a dramatic form. Even their dialogues are rhythmic and read like musical prose. A passage like the following alone gives a clear idea of the language employed in these plays and their musical style than any analysis:

Tadantara parama vipriya vāṇī śuniye rājanandinīka māthe yaice kalasa bhāgala Śrīkṛṣṇaka nairāsa śunie diśa daśa andhiyāri dekhiye murcchita huyā tatkāle parala yaise kdalika vāte opārala | Śrīkṛṣṇaka virahatāpe Rukmiṇīka yaice avasthā milala tāhe dekhaha śunaha ||

Besides, the prose of these plays reveals such rhetorical figures of speech as assonance and alliteration which are generally considered to be the traits of verse. These poetic embellishments are not sparingly used, on the contrary a whole sentence resounds with poetical vocabulary. For example:

Jagataka parama guru parama puruṣa puruṣottama sanātana Brahmā Maheśa ṣevita caraṇa paṃkaja Nārāyaṇa Śrī Śrī Kṛṣṇa | Sohi Daśaratha rājakumāra koṭi kandarpa darpa dalana Śrī Rāmacandra |

For another peculiarity also the prose of these plays resembles verse. Occasionally the last words of consecutive sentences would end in rhyme, and at places different sentences would possess equal numbers of syllables as in verse.

This prose contains many colloquial and homely expressions. Words, phrases, similes from everyday speech were laid under contribution and made to fit into the dramatic style. A few of the homely Assamese similes that frequently occur are:

Kācaka cāhite māṇika harāya (In looking for glass one loses pearls);

Jaice sisira pari padma sankucita bhaila (As a lotus closes under dew);

Jaicana vanāgni vṛṣṭi jale nirbāpita bhaila (As a forest fire is put out by rain);

Kadalika vāte upārala (As a plantain tree is uprooted by the wind).

It should be noted that Ankīyā Nāṭas were patterned after Sanskrit models and this not merely in plot-construction but also in subject-matter. This explains the presence of Sanskritic influences in them. Besides, inclusion of Nāndī ślokas in Sanskrit, the Ankīyā Nāṭas abound in many Sanskrit and Sanskritised expressions and sentences.

The post-Sankarite Ankiya Națas disclose a conventionality. They have before them the same ideal and pattern and this has continued so till to-day. Ankiya Națas are composed even now particularly by the religious pontifs of the Satras in the very same artificial Brajabuli language. Though there is not much of originality in dramatic style, form and technique yet these dramatists exhibit remarkable power in craftsmanship and handling a language which is not in current use. The Ankiyā Nāṭas made immense contribution in the field of Assamese drama and dramatic literature, and their contribution in the development of early Assamese prose cannot be too highly emphasised.

II. Prose of the Mantra texts

Contemporaneous with or even earlier than the prose of the Ankiyā plays we have the prose of the charms and riddles which are commonly known as Mantra Puthis.\(^1\) These books have not only literary value but also historical importance as the repository of popular beliefs of the middle ages. The chief of these Mantra books are: Karati Puthi (associated with knife), Virā-Jarā Puthi (Charms against evil spirits), Sāpara Dharanā Mantra (Snake charms), Sarvaḍhākā Mantra (Charms covering all), Suci Mantra (Auspicious charms).

Very old though these charms are, it is difficult to ascertain their definite date of composition. They were surely written at different times and hence the prodigiousness of the difficulty. In many of the charms one comes across references to the Quran and the Firingis. The subject matter of the Mantra-Puthis are to some extent related to the Atharva Veda. In the Brahma Karati there are clear references to it and in one passage it says: "God was sleeping in His eternal bed. When He exhaled his breath, the four Vedas came out of Him. To this the Aranya Karati of the Atharva Veda can bear witness".

Some of the charms bear traces even of the Buddhist Dhāraṇīs. The Assamese Mantra texts further have been highly influenced by popular beliefs and superstitions. The very fact that the charms are generally practised by non-Brahmanical medical men proves that this literature has no Vedic sanction. In the Brahma Karati these texts have, therefore, been called the Obhotā Veda (The Veda upturned). In order to give a Vedic stamp to the charms, expressions like Om, Svāhā, etc. have been woven into them. Many of these charms, further, end in words like ung, ang, hring, um, krong, phāt, etc. having a magical ring.²

The prose of these writings is irregular and cryptic. The sentences have a disjointed structure and are free from the rigours of grammar. They lack the essential characteristics of prose style

1. Popular editions of these texts are printed by various publishers.

^{2.} In this connection we may appropriately quote the statement of J. Vendryes who holds that words possess a magical value which accounts for the power of incantations and curses. Further, the mere word suffices to produce powerful effects, especially when it is enshrined in a verse, where the words are fixed and governed by rhythm. Virgil says that a formula in rhyme will make the moon come down out of heaven. Language, pp. 184-85.

namely coherence and precision; most of the sentences are but a conglomeration of unintelligible and mystic expressions and phrases without grammatical verbs and proper syntactical forms. Here is a passage as illustration:

Rāmara śara Lakṣmaṇara śara nāga śara pāta śara cingliyā śara pingaliyā śara deva śara Indra śara

These mystic charms read more like verse than prose, and since they are composed for the purpose of incantation, it is natural that they should be rhythmic and resemble songs. The balance, the symmetry, presence of alliteration, repetition of phrases like formulas are other qualities which make them approximate to verse. As literature, these charms are not without their importance. At places they contain narrative passages with literary ornamentation. The following picture of the divine court of Brahmā in the Sudarśana Karati reveals a first attempt at sustained descriptive writing in a mixed prosaic poetical style and with a facile handling of rhetorical figures:

Brahmādeva bahi āche camatkāra kari | ādi puvata vasilā Indra Yama dakṣṇata | uttarata Kuvera Varuṇa paścimata | āno devagaṇo āche sabhā pāti sehi samājaka cakra dekileka pāche | dekhi tharahari kāmpe yata prajā āche | camatkāra kari Indra surapati kāmpe Yama Varuṇa Kuvera | meru mandara kāmpe kari tharathara | koṭi sūrya sama yena cakra sudarśana | pralayara agni yena dahi kare channa | bharaka bharaka kari gāve lāge jui | palāi deva daitya ceñcāporā hui | caribaka saṅkā nāhi cakṣu yāya phuṭi | yāke yaite pāve cakra pelāilo kāti |

In translation the passage somewhat reads like this:

"The god Brahmā was sitting in a gorgeous manner. Indra took his seat to the east while Yama to the south of him. To his north sat Kuvera and Varuṇa, and to the west sat other gods in assembly. To that court came the wheel (cakra), seeing which all members felt a violent tremor. Indra, the king of the immortals, Yama, Varuṇa, Kuvera, all shook violently. The polar mountain Mandara also shook terribly. The wheel Sudarśana is brighter than a crore of suns together and its intensity was greater than the fire of doomsday cataclysm. The gods and the demons began stampeding at the impact of the fire radiated by the wheel. Nobody could look at it without getting their eyes blinded. The wheel tore to pieces whomsoever it got within its reach".

Here is another passage which describes the flight of ghosts before the terrible wheel of Sudarśana. It is interesting not only for its narration and homely style but also for the touch of humour which is rather rare in early prose writings:

Kāro eko khāna kāna kulāra samāna | eka kāne dui kāṇa āru cāri kāna | eka bhari dui bhari kāro kongā bhari | cakrara bhayata save palāi lavari | ati kato dhelā kato kalā kato kujā kato khorā kato bejimuvā kato dānta āchanta jongā jongā | cakrara bhayata lāgi palāi nirantara | kato kukuramuvā uṭamuvā bekā bhari pengā pengeri | kato barāmuvā bāghamuvā kato dīghalamuvā | kato dīghala peṭā kato jibhā meli thakā | kato mukhe bara lāla | kato oparacakuvā kato ṭheṭu bhagā | kato kāmoriyā peṭā | juṭulā juṭuli culi kāro mūra jongā | kāro hāṭa cuṭi dui bhari cuṭi kāro peṭa yāya māṭita bāgari | bengara samāna cakṣu cepeṭā nāsikā | kāro cuṭi dhola peṭa kato bengāmuvā | kato caku kanā kato caku khala cāla suturā suturi | kāro dui bhari phure māṭita cucari | gāvata hārara mālā bhasma dhuli | kato dui bhari āche oparata tuli | kato phecā nakā śāsana śaliyā | save yakṣa palāya lavari |

In translation the passage reads like this:

"Some had ears as big as winnowing fans. Some had one or two or even four ears. Others had either one leg or two and were lying before the Sudarśana wheel; all fled helter-skelter. Some were leprous white while others were as black as ebony. Some lame or hunch-backed and others possessed mouths shaped like the needle. Others possessed long and sharp-pointed teeth. The faces of some resembled the faces of camels, dogs, hogs or tigers. Others were long-mouthed. Some were long-bellied. Others had hanging tongues, or watering tongues, water trickling down their chins. Some had eyes turned upward. The hair of some were matted. The heads of some were pointed, some had very short hands and legs, with the result that while moving their bellies brushed the earth. Other possessed eyes and flat noses like those of frogs. Some even looked like toads. Some were blind, Others had their eyes sunk to the sockets. The skins of some were choppy. The legs of some went splashing, while the legs of others were held upwards. Their bodies were besmeared with human ashes and garlands of bones dangled from their necks. All these ghosts took to flight."

The passage doubtless reads more like verse than prose or a curious blending of both. It should be noted that prose emerged out of poetry, and in early prose there was a close resemblance between the two. In this connection the observation which Dr. S. K. De made with reference to the language of Śūnya Purāṇa, an early Bengali prose text, may also be appropriately applied to the Mantra Puthis. "Not only the condensed mode and ordenance of verse is followed here" says Dr. De, "but the symmetry of the lines, turns of phrases peculiar to verse, the refrain like repetition of sentences, the very frequent intrusion of half-staves or full verse lines capable of accurate scansion, occasional occurrence of end-rhymes, and lastly, the muffled under-hum of verse-rhythm throughout—all indicate that the passage, in close approach to the rhythm and tune of poetry, was meant, if it is prose at all, to be chanted with the verses to which it was only an appendage "3"

III. Bhattadeva and his prose-works

The Ankiyā Nāṭas and the charms hold the earliest specimens of prose, but they are mostly specimens only. Their prose had not acquired a distinct literary status. This was first conferred on Assamese prose by Bhattadeva who directly and mainly employed prose for literary treatment. It was in his hands that Assamese prose was hardened, nourished and was fitted for the expression of high spiritual matters. Vaikunthanāth Kaviratna Bhāgavata Bhattacharya, popularly known as Bhattadeva, is believed to have flourished between 1558 A.D. and 1638 A.D. His chief prose works are Kathā Bhāgavata (The Bhāgavata in prose) and Kathā Gītā (The Gita in prose).4 Noticing the rather early times in which Kathā Gītā was composed, Acharyya P. C. Ray, the noted scientist and savant of India, says, "Indeed the prose Gitā of Bhattadeva composed in the sixteenth century is unique in its kind It is a priceless treasure. Assamese prose literature developed to a stage in the far distant sixteenth century which no other literature of the world reached except the writings of Hooker and Latimer in England".

Before assessing Bhattadeva's works it is necessary to see why he discarded the traditional verse form in favour of prose. The master influence in his life was that of Dāmodara Deva at whose command Bhattadeva undertook to render these texts into Assamese prose for the benifit of women and low-caste people. Bhattadeva was to an extent successful in his great attempt. Any one who has read Kathā Bhāgavata and Kathā Gītā can without demur say that the author has succeeded in making his works intelligible to common people. By translating these two most sacred and dignified Sanskrit texts into Assamese Bhattadeva not only conferred a high status to the Assamese language but also made it an easy medium for expressing abstract thoughts and profound philosophical ideas.

^{3.} Sushil Kumar De: History of Bengali Literature in the Nineteenth Century, pp. 459-460.

^{4.} Kathā Gitā edited by Pandit H. C. Goswami, Gauhati, 1840 Saka (1918 A.D.) All the books of Kathā Bhāgavata have not been published. So far only Books I to VI have been published by Śrī Ramadeva Adhikar Goswami of Patabausi Satra. It should be noted that the word Kathā is used in Assamese as in Jaina literature in the sense of prose narrative.

Bhattadeva's learning and scholarship made his style dignified and balanced. With unparalleled skill the author has employed both Assamese and Sanskrit vocables side by side for exposition of deep spiritual thoughts. His works reveal varying styles according to the subject matter. For, as one reads Kathā Bhāgavata one feels as if he is in the midst of a religious congregation assembled for faith and prayer, and the religious scholar is explaining the text with comments on and answers to possible objections to the interpretations. None can fully appreciate the compositional skill of Kathā Gītā without entering into the atmosphere of dialogue that prevails all through these books. Here is an illustrative extract:—

Yadi bolā ketiyā avatārā dharā tāta śunā | yekhana dharmmara hāni adharmara udbhava haya tekhane sādhura rakṣārthe durjanara nāśa nimitte dharma pratipālana pade yuge yuge mayi avatāra dharo | yena mātṛye putraka lālana tāḍana kariteo nirddaya nahe temane mayiyo sādhuka rākhi asādhuka nāśa kariteo vaiṣamya śankā nakaribā | mayi āpunāra icchāi janma dharo dharmapālana nimitte āna laukika karmma karo āru yi jāne si dehata abhimāna edi moka bhāve | yadi bolā kemane janma karmmaka jānile tomāka pāve tāka śunā |

In Kathā Bhāgavata, Bhaṭṭadeva is more conscious of narrating stories and episodes so his language here is homlier and closer to raciness and terseness of the spoken speech. In this book he employed short sentences, popular vocabulary and expressive cadence of the colloquial, the three more appealing qualities needed for story-telling. The characteristic of the narrative style can be seen in the following paragraph:

Caturtha adhyāye Rsabhara caritra kahibā | Śuke kahanta pāche nābhi putraka bhagavantara lakṣaṇa dekhi bala vīryya bidyā yaśa sampatiye śrestha laksi Sabha nāma thaila | Tāke nasahiyā Indra sei barisata nabarisila tāka jāni bhagavanta Ŗṣabhadeva yoga bale bṛṣṭi karila | Nābhiyo putraka lālana tolana kari parama ānanda pāila | Pāche lokara anurāga dekhi putraka rājā pāti Vadarikāśramaka gailā | Tathāye bhakti kari bhagavantaka pāila |

(Kathā Bhāgavata, Book V. Ch. 4).

Although Bhattadeva's works were mainly translations yet they have enough of originality in them, and these have been made pleasanter by the authors incomparable style. Further, these texts are not to be considered mere renderings of one language into another but the writer made the materials his own and interpreted them according to his standpoint. The author never failed to weave into the texts homely similes, familiar maxims from standard commentaries wherever they were considered more illustrative of the arguments.

Bhattadeva had a profound grasp of Sanskrit grammar and literature which earned for him the title of Bhagavata Bhattacărya (versed in the Bhāgavata). Bhattadeva has several original Sanskrit works to his credit and before he handled Assamese prose he wrote in Sanskrit a text titled Bhaktisara (the Quintessence of Faith), a book of high metaphysical interest. Inevitably therefore, Sanskrit influences, particularly its syntax tinged his Assamese writings. Besides, as these texts are translations of Sanskrit, tatsama words naturally find easy access into them; but the author is nowhere pompous or unintelligible. The judicious use of Sanskrit words has only conferred on these religious writings dignity and grace. In syntactical structure also his writings are disciplined by Sanskrit grammar and as such they appear to be flawless. In his Kathā Gītā, however, the sentences at places run to complex length due to addition of clauses after clauses for illustrating certain knotty points. In spite of these occasional lapses, the syntax is regular, the verb is not dropped or shifted at will, and clauses are not thrown together with utter disregard of the principles of grammar, Bhattadeva's works are important steps towards the great achievements of Assamese philosophical and narrative prose. He created a sure-footed expository prose-style with an eye to grammatical perfection. His aim was to explain religious matters in a logical and clear manner, and in this Bhattadeva succeeded to a large extent. His conversational and argumentative prose style of Kathā Gītā served as a model and pattern to the Vaisnavite prose-writers of philosophical matters of later years and his simpler and freer style of Kathā Bhāgavata greatly influenced the writers of Carita Puthis.

IV. Prose of the Buranjis

The greatest development in Assamese prose literature is found in the Buranjis, the chronicles of the Ahom court. The Buranjis were compiled under the orders of kings and of the high dignitaries of the state, for they alone could grant access to state documents on which the chronicles had invariably to be based. These documents were principally the periodic reports transmitted to the court by military commanders and frontier governors, diplomatic epistles sent to and received from foreign rulers and allies, judicial and revenue papers submitted to the kings and ministers for their final orders and the day-to-day annals of the court which incorporated all the transactions done, important utterances made, and significant occurrences reported by reliable eye-witnesses (Assam Burañii, Introduction, p. xxxvi). These Buranjis were at first written in Ahom, the language of the rulers. Later, however, they came to be compiled in the Assamese language. The Burañjis constitute an unprecedented and glorious chapter in Assamese literature. It will not be an exaggeration to remark that it is through these Burañjis the modern Assamese prose emerges. Commenting on this unique historical literature Sir G. A. Grierson observes: "The Assamese are justly proud of their national literature. In no department have they been more successful than in a branch of study in which India, as a rule, is curiously deficient. The historical works or Buranjis are numerous and voluminous. A knowledge of Burañjis was an indispensable qualification to an Assamese gentleman" (Linguistic Survey of India).

The compilation of Burañjis was a sacred task, and, therefore it was customary to begin it with a salutation to the deity. The chronicles were prepared generally by men who commanded a comprehensive knowledge about state affairs, and we have several Burañjis whose authors were high government officials. Hence the language of these chronicles is dignified and graceful. Records as they are of concrete facts, they have been put in a language which is ordinarily free from sentimental rhetoric. Couched in easy, straightforward, and unambiguous language, they are charming and admirable writings.

All these vast historical writings have not yet been completely brought to light. Dr. S. K. Bhuyan is publishing some of them under the auspices of the Department of Historical and Antiquarian Studies, Government of Assam. The prose chronicles published so far by the said Department are: Assam Burañjī by Harakanta Barua (1930), Deodhāi Asama Burañjī, a compilation from several sources (1932), Tungkhungīyā Burañjī by Srīnāth Duarā (1932), Kachāri Burañjī (1936), Jayantiyā Burañjī (1937), Tripurā Burañjī (1938), and Asama Burañjī (1945). Two other important chronicles, viz. the Puraṇi Asama Burañjī (1922) and the Pādshāha Burañjī have been published by the Kāmarūpa Anusandhāna Samiti and edited respectively by Pandit Hemachandra Goswami and Dr. S. K. Bhuyan.

The dates of composition of all these Burañjīs have not definitely been ascertained; they were perhaps compiled over a long period, beginning from the late sixteenth to the early nineteenth century. Chronologically speaking, Puraṇi Asama Burañjī edited by the late Pandit Hemachandra Goswami, may be taken to be the earliest. Goswami considers the work to be a compilation of the reign of Gadādhar Siṃha (1681—1695). Another chronicle Svarganārāyaṇadeva Mahārājara Ākhyāna now published under the title Assam Burañjī was also believed to be compiled, according to Dr. S. K. Bhuyan, during this period.

Pandit Goswami also came to the conclusion that Kathā Gītā was composed sometime after 1594. So the time intervening between the composition of Kathā Gītā and Puraņi Asama Burañjī is roughly about one hundred years. Purani Asama Buranji shows clearly how during these one hundred years, Assamese prose was shaping itself. It is true that Bhattadeva broke away from the conventional style of ornamental language, and had for the first time in the history of Assamese literature adopted the spoken language as medium for prose; but he was not completely free from the influence of the ornate and cultivated Sanskritised style. As already pointed out Bhattadeva indeed succeeded to a large extent in using an Assamese vocabulary in spite of his classical learning that encumbered him. But in the structure of his sentenses he could not completely get away from the Sanskrit model, and a large percentage of tatsama words made their inroads into his writings. The language of the Buranjis, however, is completely free from classical influences as they were written on subject matter which was entirely different in tone and kind. The Buranjis have no association whatsoever with scriptural texts. These are narrations and descriptions of affairs of royal families, an intimate portrayal of manners and characters of the people of the time compiled by experienced men of affairs with a sense of historical perspective. They give us in a historical method the court life, the royal routine, the daily relation of the court with outsiders of every description. For these reasons the language of the Buranjis cannot but reflect the spoken language of the court. Based as it was on the cultural language of the court, it is admirable for richness, straightforwardness, clearness, and fitted well for historical narration. "It is curious how the Assamese intellect", observes Dr. S. K. Bhuyan, "nurtured on the extravagance of Vaisnava poetry, could pin itself down to the chronicling of grim realities and hard facts in a colourless and impersonal fashion. The bridge between the two phases of the intellect labouring in the realm of fiction or of fact was afforded by the model set forth in the Buranjis written in the Ahom language, the chroniclers of which enjoyed immunity from the influence of imaginative poetry and who were subjected to rigorous discipline and supervision as their works were compiled as a matter of official routine."5 How the Buranjis struck out a style graceful and full of cadence will be seen from the following descriptive passage from Purani Asama Buranji which refers to a battle scene between the Ahoms and the Moghuls:

Lānamākharu Ceţiyā Pāṇḍuta Baḍaphukana hai thākila | Samaste Baruābore gai hājoka beḍhi gaḍha dile | Tancu Sandikai gaḍha nahala māne hātī āgakai āchila | Pāche Baṅgāle gaḍa bāja hui samukhe yuddha dile | Pāche Ābdula Islāma Nāvābata kāḍa lāgila | Muhudi Nabāba āga hala | Hātira kapālata guli lāgila | Hātiyo ubhati palāla ghoḍā paḍila naṭā | Teve baṅgāla āponāra gaḍha bhaṅga hui rahila | Āhomeo gaḍha dāṅgi baṅgālaka beḍhi dharilegai | Baṅgāleo olāi yuddha nedi pāche kākuti kari bāṭa māge | Bole āmi yuddha eḍilo tomārā dharmma patha cāri diyā | Āmāra deśaka yāo tathāpito baḍaphukane neḍile mahārājata bhaye | Eimate ek māsa gala | Baṅgāle khāba nāpāi gaḍhara bhitarate sukāi mare | Āmāra mānuhe kāḍara āgata cāulara ṭupali māri paṭhāi | bangāleo kāḍara āgata rupara ṭupali māri paṭhāi | eikathā mahārājā suni dāi dhari paṭhāle |

(Purani Asama Burañji, p. 103-4).

Though there was no need for literary airs and graces, yet the Buranjis are not wholly devoid of such embellishment. In this connection another remark of Dr. S. K. Bhuyan, made with reference to the literary flavour in Padshah Buranji, may also be applied to other Buranjis with equal force. He states, "The historical narrative is not dry bone. One notices in it thought and emotions too. Hence it ascends to the level of pure literature. It will not be too much to say that such a confluence of history and literature is not to be found in any modern Indian literature in the pre-British period. What would otherwise be a dry historical narrative, has in the hands of the writer, become an entertaining historical literature punctuated to the reader's satisfaction by such elements of style as simile, analogy, illustrations, episodes and diversions". The secret of success in the Buranjis lies greatly in sentence construction, vernacular idioms and the expressive cadence of the spoken language. The writers are adepts in expressing themselves in short sentences and simple phraseology. Take it where you will, the vivacity and simplicity of the style is inestimable:

^{5.} Tungkhungia Bunanji, Intro. p. 24.

Carāye povāli tole thoṭata dhari uruvāi cāi | pākhi jadi gajila udiba jadi pādile | māikīra lagata cari buli āhi bāsa layahi | pākhi jadi samāna hala māikiye ādhāra diba novāri uduvāi niye | eka udānadi paregai dunāi bāsa napāi hi | kono śiyāla kukure khāi nāi mānuhe dhari niye doābāra bāh nāpāi | kumāre caru bece pāike hātata lai bajāi cāi | yadi hātata bājila cāri kadā kadiko diye caruko niye | sei jadi hātata nābāje niyeniki |

(Purani Asama Burañji, p. 133).

The Burañjīs further contributed largely towards enrichment of Assamese vocabularies in deverse directions. They incorporate a large number of administrative terms and legal expressions used in the Āhom court. Words from the Āhom language are also not rare. Such words are used to denote things and institutions which are distinctly connected with Āhom life and culture. Words of Arabic and Persian origin also have been deeply laid under contribution, particularly in ambassadorial and diplomatic deeds and documents.

These Burañjis were mostly written in the eastern dialect of Assamese (ujani bhāṣā) which from this time began to take rank as a standard literary speech. The causes contributing to this were the predominating importance of eastern Assam as the seat of the Ahom court and administration, and centre of trade and commerce, which made the eastern Assamese the language of affairs. It was after the pattern of this prose that the easy and simple prose of the Orunodoi (1846) the first periodical in Assamese, developed in the early years of the 19th century.

V. Prose of the Carita Puthis

Even when the historical literature was developing under State patronage, literature of a different kind was taking its birth, This was the Carita under the aegis of the Vaisnavite Satras. Puthis, lives of the saints. Besides the lives of Sankaradeva, the lives of many other Vaisnavite saints were continued to be written both in prose and verse during and after the 17th century A.D. Recitations from the biographies of the saints as a kind of religious spur to villagers are done after congregational prayers even up to this day. Kathā Guru Caritas (a prose biography of Śańkaradeva and Mādhavadeva) has it that it was Mādhavadeva who for the first time introduced this practice by himself taking to recitation of his Guru's biography. After the death of Sankaradeva, his disciples must have tried over a long period to compile his biography. In all the biographies the day-to-day experiences and incidents of the saints' lives personally witnessed by the monkish compilers or handed down by sacred traditions have been laid down without sifting the importance from the insignificant, and accepting legends and myths without any historical scrutiny. Be that as it may, these Carita Puthis are the first attempts in Assamese at writing biographies.

The Carita Puthis aimed at generating a sense of reverence and devotion in the minds of the ordinary men towards the saints by a recital of incidents from their lives. Hence the prose of these lives and the manner of their compilation differ widely from that of Bhattadeva as well as the court chronicles. While Bhattadeva's original was Sanskrit, the Burañjis derived their materials from state papers and records. The Carita Puthis were free from both these types of influences. The subject-matter of the Carita Puthis was directly the lives of the eminent Vaisnavite saints. They, therefore, contain pictures of contemporary Assamese religious life, records of customs and manners current at the time, and accounts of the religious institutions. Further, they were compiled to supply inspiration to the masses. Naturally these writings were expressed in simple, emotional and more homely and informal speech of the people.

It should be noted that the use of a spoken language is dependent mainly on three factors — the structure of the sentences, the peculiar use of pronouns and verbs, and adequacy or otherwise of the vocabulary. "What particularly characterizes spoken language", says J. Vendryes "is that it contents itself with emphasizing the main lines of thought. These alone emerge and dominate the sentence, while the logical relations of words, and component parts of a sentence, are either imperfectly indicated, with the help, if necessary, of intonation and gesture, or are not indicated at all and have to be supplied by intuition. This spoken language thus approximates to spontaneous language, so called because it gushes spontaneously from the mind under the pressure of strong emotion. The striking words are then prominently placed, as the speaker has neither the leisure nor the time to mould his thought according to the strict rules of reflective and organized language." Further, in every spoken style there is always some dramatic quality. Everywhere in the Carita Puthis dialogues have been woven into descriptive passages with unparalleled literary elegance. Both short and long sentences occur wherever they are required for balance and poise, for effectiveness and for beauty. In the same passage indicative, interrogative and such other types of sentences occur as indeed they do so in spontaneous speech of everyday. This breaks down monotony and affords diversity. The following passage on saint Rādhikā, taking from the Kathā-Guru-Carita will hold that style to bold relief: -

Now published by Shri Harinarayan Dutta Barua, Nalbari, and edited by Prof. U. C. Lekharu.

"Gurujane gai bole viprasaba ei jana dhara śanti halehe bandhiba pāri | Pāche brāhmaņe bole āmara ghare pati šāntī āche, kāilai anā haba | Bole ānibāhā eikhāni, kabā palare Brahmaputrara jala aniba lage rolehe patibrata sati | Tehe gai sabe vipre sudhile grhepati olāla | Palare jala anā ka'lata tochā khāle napāro buli | Pācha dinā sabe cāpila | Guru sudhile bole āge ghare ghare mae bulie jala anā ka'lata pācha huiki paila | Tehe gurujane bāmuņara āgata Skandha Purāṇara eka ārhi kaiche | Kaliṅga deśara rājāra mukhata bethā roga hala | Pāche dukhata rājā ene angīkāra karile bole mora byādhi yeye cāba pāre tāke mora ardha rājya dima Tāke śuni aneka deśara aneka vaidya dhanantarī Atharvavedī āhi aneka takā bākhara rajata subarņa bhāni jārana kari khuvāi die | Phota michā | Pāche rājāra āpāla lāgi nihale rākhi thaya | Ei mate kata bandī hai pari āche āśāta | Pāche katodinara mūrata eță beja majaliyă ăhi dvārata bole rājā bandī nakaile āmi e cālohete pārô ki cāro | Dvārī jāna dilegai | Rājā niyāle | Gai vaidye bole cāba pāri | Śāntīra etopā khīra lāge | Rājāra ocarate guru brāhmana āchila cāle | Bole mahārājā āmāra grehe āche etiksane anā yāba | Ei buli uthi gañ bhari gaiche | Pathe pāi yi loke sudhile bole bara bega daho | Bole rājā auşadhalai Sāntira tana ano

āmāra grehara | Pāche si bole tai sarvanāśa habi | Racho mai kao | Tumi gai cotālara mūre ghumāi basi thāka gai asantoṣa bhāve | Ānasabe mātile gā nudhubi | Pāche tora bhāryyā mātile ei kathā kabi | Buli eśapati veśyāra tana bicāri diba diche rājā auṣadhalai | Vaide khuiche kata pāma | Ki gā dhuma yā | Vipre gai sei mate āche bahi | Putre bhātre māte namāte | Patnī olāi mātilehi kale sei krame | Tāi bole gā dhovā ki cintā karā | More nāhaiche | Ekahe kama | Pānīlai yāote pūrāma | Ni dibā | Vipre śuni atrāhi hai guni mane bole mora jāti krīyā sakalo gala ei veśyāra saṅge-jīva dukhahe haba | Ei buli sabāke chāri bane gai yoga cinti gati labhile. Jānā gurusaba, tomārā sabaro tenehe haiche | Bāmune śuni maune tuṣa heṭa māthe adhomukhe rala" (pp. 39-49).

The inconsistency of the homely life is, as it were, reflected in speech which may, and does often run counter to grammar. In strict grammar in Assamese, the subject comes first, and the verb comes last, other parts of speech coming in between the two. In an irregular sentence the writer uses at the beginning, or at the end, the word which he wants to specially emphasize, no matter what part of speech it is. The Carita Puthis contain many such irregular popular usages. Further, the use of the right word at the right place makes these writings easily attractive. Right use of verbs, idioms and phrases makes the prose of the Carita Puthis not only chaste but also lively. Although there is no attempt at literary grace, yet the prose of the Carita Puthis is not absolutely free from ornament. Their diction was enriched by profusion of metaphors, similes, alliterations which had come spontaneously and without much effort.

As has already been noted, the subject matter of the Carita Puthis is something different from the dry religious truths and court feuds. These are something like the daily diaries of famous and revered masters. Here the reader feels quite at home; for in these writings they find the records of men who are intimately connected with their society. The subject-matter of Kathā Gītā and the Burañjīs was factual, objective and impersonal—for the most part they are dissertations on philosophy, or dry accounts of facts. The subject-matter of the Carita Puthis, however, is to some extent, subjective. The writer is himself a devotee and as such he has spiritual meeting with the hero of his book. A mere factual statement of events and incidents is never his aim. He must show how the example of his master has touched and influenced him, so that others might feel a similar inspiration. In his pages the hero lives over again — with his happiness and sorrow, fame and calumny, rise and fall, and all such things which evoke a human interest and even sympathy in the reader's mind. Here in these writings for the first time we come into more intimate relationship with the great personalities of our country and see them in the social surroundings in which they lived, and contemporary men and women with whom they worked and daily conversed. In this respect the Carita Puthis may be taken to be human documents of irresistible charm, absorbing interest, and of wide appeal.

Of special interests in these biographies are the simplicity, deep faith and sincerity of the devotee-compiler, which create a fine and homely atmosphere. This could not have been achieved merely by the adoption of the spoken language. The whole atmosphere is delightfully free and unconventional like homely life itself. It is the spirit of ease and unsophisticatedness which had made it possible even for anecdotes of the supernatural kind to find an accommodation in them. While the anecdotes of the supernatural kind associated with the lives of the saints arouse a sense of reverence for the wonderful in the hearts of the devotees, those of their everyday life help in establishing a sense of kinship and sympathy by bringing out their essential human nature. These human documents are not without the element of humour; specially the quaintness of many colloquiallisms and the very naivete of the authors tend to produce a sense of humour for the modern reader.

VI. Miscellaneous Prose

(a) Prose of Religious Books

As noticed above, it was Bhattadeva, who directed the course of Assamese literature towards prose. Some of his own contemporaries followed his lead and translated several Sanskrit texts in prose. All of these books have, however, not yet seen the light. Even those that have been published have not yet been subjected to a critical examination. It is, therefore, not easy to ascertain their chronology. Many of them follow different orthographies. Hence comparative study can hardly yield good results. A discussion, on the basis of chronology, of Bhattadeva's successors has not, therefore, been attempted here. Instead, an effort has been made to see the different samples of prose that they disclose.

The first essay in Assamese commentary literature is provided by Paraśurāma's Kathā Ghoṣā—a prose rendering of the famous Nāma Ghoṣā of Mādhavadeva. The manuscript copy of Kathā Ghoṣā now kept in the library of the Kāmarūpa Anusandhāna Samiti, is dated 1715 A.D. In explaining the text, the writer of Kathā Ghoṣā has cited matters from other scriptures as well. Another book, of the same period, is Satvata Tantra - an Assamese rendering of a Sanskrit text of the same title. Kṛṣṇananda Dvija's Pūrna Bhāgavata, though principally a verse rendering, contains prose passages here and there. Pandit Goswami, in his Descriptive Catalogue of Assamese Manuscripts mentions that a book named Padma Purana,-a prose manual of morals and manners, was composed in 1769 A.D. The book begins with a chapter on the virtue of putting Rudrāksa beads on one's person. The book contains also chapters on the merits of a bath in the Brahmaputra, and of fasting on Ekādaśī (11th day of the moon) and Janmastami (Lord Krsna's birthday) days, and rules to be observed in the several months of the calendar. Another noted book is Raghunātha Mahanta's Kathā Rāmāyana (Rāmāyana in prose). The same author has to his credit the metrical Satruñjaya, composed in 1618 A.D. Pandit Goswami believes Kathā Rāmāyana to be a work of the same period. Kathā Rāmāyang is not a literal translation of the Sanskrit epic. The Ādi, Āyodhyā, Āranya, and the Kiskindhyā cantos have been abridged. There is a dramatic setting about the whole book. The influence of the Ankiya Natas is specially to be noticed in the language of Kathā Rāmāyana, as can be seen by comparing it with Sankaradeva's Rāma Vijaya. The language of Kathā Rāmāyana is not completely free from the influence of Sanskrit, Tatsama words appear, and here and there Sanskrit sentences also occur.

(b) Prose of Utilitarian Literature

Many Sanskrit books other than religious were translated into Assamese prose. Of these, several old manuscripts have been discovered. They deal with medicine, astronomy, rules of arithmetic, dancing and architecture. In these books for the first time Assamese prose was employed for the discussion of utilitarian knowledge. Most of them were translated from Sanskrit texts and by Sanskrit scholars. It was natural, therefore, that Sanskrit would leave some stamp on them, more especially as upto that time a sufficient number of tatbhava and racy words with clear-cut usages had not been evolved. The study of Sanskrit texts for knowledge was indeed indispensable but Sanskrit words were even more necessary to enrich Assamese prose vocabulary. It must, however, be added that although tatsama words were borrowed, the Assamese writers used a more straightforward and direct style suited to their subject-matter which may be classed under science. For the same reason these books are, generally speaking, free from unintelligibility and vagueness. Apart from their value as literary beauties and technical excellences, they are most important as examples of the contemporary handling of prose for scientific purpose. The chief is Hastividyarnava of Sukumar Barkath. This illustrated book was written in 1734 under orders of king Siva Simha and his consort, Queen Ambikadevi. The illustrations were drawn by the painters Dilbar and Dosai. The book contains descriptions of several kinds of elephants, the ways of training them, their diseases and their cures. The book also lays down the different categories of elephants to be used by men belonging to different social classes. The materials of Hastividyarnava are stated in the text itself to have been taken from Gajendra Cintāmani of Sambhunātha. The prose of Hastividyārnava does not differ from the prose of the chronicles. It has similar sentence formation and vocabulary. The orthography is phonetic and the structure of sentences follows that of everyday speech.

The Ghorānidāna, a treatise on horses, is another book of the same class. This book has been edited (1932) by Tarini Charan Bhattacharya and published by the Government of Assam. In his preface to Ghorā Nidāna, Dr. S. K. Bhuyan observes: "These iwo representative treatises (Hastividyārnava and Ghorā Nidāna) reveal the richness and variety of the Assamese pharmacopoea and their literary value consists in the presentation of a very large number of expressions now thrown in to disuse". Another book of useful knowledge is Śrīhastamuktāvalī of Śubhańkara. The book is a collection of Sanskrit ślokas taken from different texts on dramaturgy, and dealing with the movements of hands and fingers in acting. To these ślokas Assamese translations have been added. The translator has tried to give, as far as possible, suitable Assamese equivalents to Sanskrit words, Kaviraj Chakravarti's Bhāsvati is a book of astronomy. If he is the same person who wrote Sankhacūda Vadha, Sakuntalā Kāvya, the metrical Brahmavaivarta Purāņa and a translation of Gitagovinda then he must be a contemporary of king Śiva Simha (1714-1744). Bhāsvati is an abridged adaptation of the Sanskrit Surya Siddhanta. Of the books of arithmetic mention must be made of Ankara Āryyā of Kashinath. The book discusses, besides arithemetic, rules of land measurement and the method of finding the square root of figures. At places the book contains Sanskrit verses,

There were treatises also on architecture, road construction, and such other subjects. A passage, bearing on building construction, taken from the history of Changrung Phukan, now preserved in the Department of Historical and Antiquarian Studies, is quoted below to show the type of prose that this book contains:

Pramatta Simha Devara pāṭa gharara khera ruvā ṭakupāta betara lekhā devara bara gharata ruvā 1289 ṭā | Saḍāha kāmi 8 kāūna, bāna kāmi 13½ kāūna, ṭupara kāmi 11 kaūna, chāvani kāmi 3 kāūna, 36½ khera, 464080 ṭā ṭakupāta, 34080 ṭā betabarasuta, 1680 sarusuta, 51 kaūna, barabāṭagharara ruvā, 729 ṭā śaḍahakāmi 1 ṭakā, bānakāmi 5 kaūna, hōlāṅgara duvāra bale 4 hāta okhake 5 hāta, ghariyāla dharā dui phuṭāra mājhata 8 hāta, mājari okhake 2 hāta, 4 āñgula, tāṅkākara mājara 2 hāta, 2 āñgula ṭupa dīrghe 18 hāta dole gharīyā charāra duvāra okhake 5 hātara parā mājha pāli gaḍhalai 38 beñŏ āre parā māṭī gaḍhalai 45 beñŏ, ālira so mājara parā daraba gharalai nilaga 24 beñŏ |

Hara Gaurī Samvāda is another book written in the form of questions and answers. It is a translation of the mythico-historical king. The book was prepared perhaps during the reign of Kamaleswar Simha (1790-1810).

From the number of prose works composed during the period between the time of Bhattadeva and the composition of Hastividyarnava, that have come to our hand, it is easy to see how Assamese prose literature developed enormously in several directions. The influence of Sanskrit was, of course, there over all. It was more obviously the case with serious books - philosophical and religious - which were mostly translations from Sanskrit and that done by Sanskrit scholars. Assamese had not till then developed an adequate number of tatbhava and racy words, nor were their use standardised. Except Sanskrit there was nothing that could serve as a pattern of grammar and style. Therefore imitation of Sanskrit on the part of the new-born Assamese prose was not merely necessary, but also inevitable. Though modelled after Sanskrit texts and commentaries Assamese prose had done away with unnecessary verbal rhetoric and too many compounds, and had thus attained clarity. Its aim was the spread of religious and useful knowledge amongst the average man. Hence its clarity and simplicity. Everywhere in these books there are proofs of ability to express ideas in an exact, logical, relevant, and whenever needed, in short and brief fashion. Apart from their value as literature and art, these books are of the greatest importance for proper appraisement of the intellectual activity of old Assam.

VII. Prose of Diplomatic Letters and State Documents

(a) Prose of Diplomatic Letters

The use of Assamese prose in state papers, files and documents not only widened its scope but also conferred on the everyday speech a literary status. This was doubtless owing to the sympathy and patronage of the court. Before the Ahoms came, all state records were kept in Sanskrit. It was during the times of the Ahoms that Assamese prose was used for the first time in state business. In the courts of the Kachāri, Koch, and Jayantiyā Kings also Assamese got predominance. Old Assamese prose was thus nurtured in the court of kings and potentates. Prose became the vehicle of expression in diplomatic letters, state records, and grants and the medium for the law courts. The result was that prose expanded in different directions, developing different techniques and forms and getting enriched in its vocabulary.

One such diplomatic letter written in 1555 A.D. by king Naranārāyaṇa of Cooch Behar to king Svarganārāyaṇa has come to hand. Naranārāyaṇa's letter is rather free from the presence of too many Persian words which is generally the case in letters of this kind of the 16th century. The letter is given below:

"Svasti sakala digadantikarņatānāsphāna samīraņa pracalita himakara hāra hāsa kāśa kailāsa pāņdura yaśorāśi virājīta tripistapa tridaśatarangiņī salila nirmāna pavitra kalevara bhīsaņa pracaņda dhīra dhairyya maryyādā pārābāra sakala dikkāminī gīyamāna guņa santāna Srī Srī Svarganārāyaņa mahārājā pracaņda pratāpesu

Lekhanan kāryanca | Ethā āmāra kuśala | Tomāra kuśala nirantare bānchā kari | Athana tomāra āmāra santosa sampādaka patrīpatri gatāyāta haile ubhayānukula prītira bīja ankurita haite rahe | Tomāra āmāra kartabyese bardhatāka pāi puspita phalita haibeka | Āmārā sei udyugate āci | Tomāro egoṭa kartabya ucita haya | Nākara tāka apāne jāna | Adhika ki lekhima | Satānanda kāyyi o Rāmeśvara śarmā kālaketuo dhubā sarddāra udanda cāuniyā śyāmarāi imarāka pāṭhāitechi | Tāmarāra mukhe sakala samācāra bujhiyā citāpa bidāya dibā | Apara ukīlara sange ghudi 2 dhanu 1 chenga matsya 1 jora bālisa 1 jakāi 1 sāri 5 khāna ei sakala diyā gaiche | Āra samācāra buji kahi pāṭhāibeka āra tomāra arthe sangala

deśa gomaseń 1 cita 5 ghāgari 10 kṛṣṇāmara 20 śukla cāmara 10 | Iti śaka 1447 māsa Āṣāḍha |

A letter written by king Svarganārāyaṇa to king Naranārāyaṇa also has come to hand. A copy of this letter has been preserved in the Department of Historical and Antiquarian Studies. The letter is as following:

Svasti tripura hara caraņa svarga śrī parņa sudhāpāna bhringapayamāna sampana dāna santāna śauryya dhairyya gāmbhīryyodāryya pārābāra tuhinakara nikara tarangiņī taranga pāndura yaśorāśi virajita kula kamala prakāśakaika bhāskara Śrīmanmallanārāyana rāja mahodara caritreşu

Lekhanan kāryanca | Atra kuśala | Tomāra kuśala bārttā śuniya paramāpyāyīta hailo | Āra je lekhica prītibrikṣa ankurīta seie tomāra āmāra sādhlādeta briddhira pāyā phalita puṣpita haibāra khāna yi kahica i goṭa viśeṣa kintu tomāra āmāra prīti goṭa jihata hante ghatice tāka samaste jāne | Seirūpa maryyādā vyavahārata yadi rahiba phalita puṣpita kisaka nahaba | Āmarā pūrva abhiprāyate āci āra ukīlara sange ji sakala dravyādi pathāichilā i sakala sabhāta dekhāibāra ucita nahaya kintu ji sakale jihaka ācari thāke apīti haileo ācaranīya sakale tāke nīti svarūpe dekhe eteke divāka povā | Āra samuccaya sei sei dravyata pravarttanīya lokera dvārāe ji bujhuvā gaiche seirūpe bujhibā | Tomāra ukīlera sange āmāra ukīla Śrīcanḍībara o Śrī Dāmodara Śarmāka pathovā gaiche | Emarāra mukhe sakala samācāra bujhibā | Tomāra arthe sandeša naḍā kāpora 2 thāna gajadanta 4 gāṭhiyana 2 monā pahucibe | Iti śaka 1478 |

Both these letters begin with Sanskrit ślokas, and have some Sanskrit influences. As these were sent to the heads of foreign states their sentence formations were sober and business like and the descriptions dignified. A collection of old diplomatic letters, preserved in the National Archive of the Government of India, has been edited by Dr. Surendranath Sen and published by the Calcutta University (1942), under the title "Prāchīn Bāṅgalā Patra Saṅkalan". Several letters written by Ahom Kings and officers have been printed in the volume. They are the best of contemporary correspondence and stand out as documents of high importance for the political history of the time.

(b) Prose of Land-grants

Several stone and copper plates on land-grants made by Ahom kings have been discovered. The following quotation, taken from a stone inscription of Cāmadharā Gar, dated 1616 A.D., provides a specimen of the prose of the land-grants:

"Śrībhaṇḍāri gosāi Lāṅgipo gosāi | Baḍaphukana nāi saliyāvāi | Cāmadhāra simā kari hāruni dāruni dārunilai gaḍh | Śaka 1538 | Śrī Śrī Svargaṅārāyaṇara jaya jaya | Śrī kuluṅ gosāi Śrī Kulatā gosāi | Śrī Jadubaruvā jaya hala |

The number of stone inscriptions containing Assamese prose, and discovered till now is however not great. Most of the landgrants were made on copper plates, and they were written in the pattern of Indian land-grants. Each plate commences with the benedictory word svasti. The initial śloka written in Sanskrit, and bearing the year, contains laudatory references to the king who makes the grant. These copper plate land-grants contain, besides the measurement and boundaries of the lands, an enumeration of a host of allied information. They contain a detailed account of the measure of expenditure to be made on specified festive occasions, the graded quantities in which articles of offerings are to be distributed amongst the religious assemblage, and enumeration of the graded services to be rendered by each of the Sevāits, Pāiks, Bardeuris, etc., and the graded amounts of rice, butter, oil, betel-nut and betel-leaf and such other articles that are to be alloted to different festive occasions and religious ceremonies.

(c) Prose of Court-documents

It has already been noted that Assamese was used in the court as a state language, and all deeds, documents, records, complaints, and court judgments were kept in Assamese. A vast mass of such documents is now discovered which reveals the prominent characteristics of the prose used therein. The following is a specimen of the prose used in a document of complaint:

Sargadevara bandi Šivarāma bara thākura e prārthanā kari janāiche | pūve išvara Gaurīnātha Simha sargadeva e bandira pitā Hārinātha barathākuraka barakalā pathārata pūve āhata gach paścime marānai uttare barašimalu dakṣine hijala gach ei cāri had kari callis purā roati māṭī sargadevara punyārtha brahmottara kari dichila | Sei kālare parā ājilaike tini cāri janā sargadevara dinata eko jaya jañjala nohovākai dhan-bita nabharākai māṭi khāi achilohaka | Etiyā Siddhirama Hājarikāe sei māṭīre parā balakai pakā dhānakô dāi nile bandiko mārile ene hale bandiye kenekai dešata thākim | Dāḍiye duvāre ephālai bhāgi yāva lagāhe halô | Yadi sargadevara dukhāni caraņe sudhi-puci nerākhile rakṣā pāba

naparā halo | Eteke sargadevara caraņata prārthanā karī jānāicho sargadevara carane rākhile rakṣā pāo | Iti 1761 tārikha 9 kārtika | 7

The language of this petition is very simple and lucid. The use of homely idioms and well-arranged sentences and flawless style confers on it literary grace. In this petition the language employed has been an apt medium of ideas and makes the solicitations transparently clear. The petitioner has given not merely a catalogue of facts which he wants to state but also tried successfully to appeal to the king's feelings by precise communication.

The following quotation from a Manuh-beca Kākata (Saledeed of slaves) will be found interesting both for form and content:

1721 puṣara 4 dina thakāta kujabāre Śrī Śrī Kamaleśvarasingha mahārājāra rājyata manuśyara kraya vikraya kare | Salagurīyā sādhu ātā kine | Lerelu saikiyā Siddhibarā haite samanite kuri gayāi bece | Mohanaka rūpa chaṭakā atyarthe sākhī Ṭañgacudekā Kalāi 1 Dusarīyā śaikīyā Bahudāsa 1 carācôvā Jiurāma 1 carāra dalai cābara 2 nātha 1 āru anekô āchila |

(d) Prose of the Peda-Kākata (Chest papers)

During the reign of the Ahom king Siva Simha (1714-1744) a survey of lands was made in the present Kamrup district. Along with it, a census of the people was also taken. The papers containing figures, statistics, and accounts of these survey and census are technically known as Pedā-Kākata, as these papers were kept locked up in wooden chests (pedā). Besides, matters relating to land survey, these papers contain records of disputes over land, their arbitrations, judgments and orders.

VIII: General Remarks

In the foregoing sections an attempt has been made to indicate the channels along which and the way in which Assamese prose has evolved from the 15th century to the 18th century A.D. For convenience sake early Assamese prose literature may broadly be thrown into four categories, namely, the prose of religious books, of Burañjis, of Caritaputhis, and of state deeds and diplomatic documents. Further, it should be noted that early Assamese prose developed around the Satras (monasteries) and the court; consequently it acquired mainly two broad styles. The Satras were centres of religious and Sanskritic learning and culture; both these influences have, therefore, left their indelible mark on the prose that grew around the Satras. The second variety of prose developed around the court and under the patronage of kings and as such it not only got a wider field of subject-matter but also a freer mode of expression. In this prose, old conservatism both of matter and language gave way to liberalism. Reckless borrowing, mainly of Sanskrit words and phrases are abandoned, and it unhesitatingly began to borrow vocables from other sources including Arabic and Persian. A large number of racy, native words found their way into the literary diction which resulted in the growth of hybrids in a varied and enriching manner. Their introduction removed serious vocabular defects of 'one word for one idea'. Assamese now comes to possess several synonyms to express one and the same thing. Thus Assamese prose grew less monotonous and more varied and became a thing of considerable grace and power.

^{7.} Quoted from Manual of Bengali Language by Nicholl (1894) p. 358-9.

MADHAVADEVA AND HIS WORKS

By

T. N. SARMA

The spiritual relation between Sankaradeva and Mādhavadeva is described in two different ways. Sankaradeva the incarnation of Krsna accepted Madhavadeva as his chief apostle through whom he made the religion of bhakti known to all. In this respect they are likened to Kṛṣṇa and Uddhava.1 According to the second view Madhavadeva is regarded as an incarnation of the supreme God Nărāyana and as such the analogy of Krsna and Balarāma is brought in to explain his relationship with Sankaradeva.2 Whatever may be the spiritual significance of this to the Vaisnava bhaktas of Assam there can be no question that Madhava rightly deserves this exalted position. He gave the final shape to Mahāpurusiya cult, completed the religious exegesis which in sheer literary merit still remains unsurpassed, and above all filled his disciples with an inspiration that made it possible for them to carry the message of the new religion to the remotest and inaccessible parts of Assam. Guru Nānak notwithstanding his having two sons preferred to appoint Angada, the most devoted of his disciples, the head of the newly formed religious community. Sankaradeva similarly nominated Mādhava as his successor in preference to his son of whose ability he was rather dubious. This succession according to tradition was a sort of spiritual transmission and as such Madhavadeva occupies a unique position in the Vaisnava hierarchy of Assam.

The story that so many Bhūyā families migrated to Assam in a body may or may not be historically true but that they moved from place to place, sometimes en masse, within the province, has little to doubt. The chaotic condition of the first half of the fifteenth century was mainly responsible for this internal migration of the nobility of the period. This was however a boon in disguise, for wherever they went they tried to keep the Aryan religion and culture alive, specially at a time when the slow and fitful process of Aryanisation in this part of India came to a sudden stop. It was in such a family that Sankaradeva was born and it was again a Bhūyā family that gave us Mādhavadeva.

^{1.} Bhūsana Dvija: Śankara-carita, 404, 616.

^{2.} Amūlya-ratna, ed. Krsna Kānta Das, Nalbari 47-48; 210-215.

Mādhava was born in the family of Hari Bhūyā, a contemporary of Candivara, the great-grandfather of Sankaradeva. His father Govindagiri after the death of his wife left his home in the western part of Kāmarūpa and came to Tembuwānī in the modern district of Nowgong in search of better fortune or a congenial social surrounding. Tembuwani at that time was the place of the Siromani Bhūyas. There he married for the second time a girl named Manoramă. Those were the troubled days of Kachārî raids. The Kachāris in general had not been hinduised till then. They were in constant conflict with the Ahoms in the east, but met with reversal almost on every occasion. The Bhuya warriors must have helped the Ahoms against the Kachārīs and naturally the Kachārīs viewed the activities of the Bhūyās with suspicion. They took every opportunity to take the Bhūyas by surprise and became a constant menace to their life and property. It was during the turmoil of such a raid that Govindagiri with his newly married wife who was in the family way hastened to betake themselves to a safer place. As ill luck would have it, they were robbed of all their money and belongings when they were asleep by the side of a river on the way. Govindagirī turned a poor man overnight. A gentleman who happened to pass by that river took pity on the couple and admitted them to his boat. From that day for almost a decade Govindagiri virtually spent his days as a dependent of Harisinga Bara, for that was the name of the gentleman. It was here about the last decade of the fifteenth century that Madhavadeva came to this world.

Mādhavadeva passed his boyhood in want and hardship. Cut off from his near relations in a distant place Govindagirī found himself in an unenviable position. His age was not such as to be able to undertake new adventures to earn a comfortable living. His health had already gone down hill owing to a sort of rheumatic pain. Govindagirī was thus forced by circumstances to continue in that state of dependency for several years. One day one of the sons of Harisingabarā had treated him very badly and this he felt so much that in spite of failing health he started to seek fortune elsewhere. For sometime he moved from place to place with his wife, son and newly born daughter till at last he met Ghāgari Mājhi, a friend of his early days. Ghāgari succeeded in persuading Govinda to accept his hospitality. Ghāgari Mājhi was a conscientious man. He did not like that Govindagirī should feel the until the started to seek fortune govinda to accept his hospitality.

easiness of being dependent on others. He therefore rendered all possible help to young Madhava, who was hardly in his teens, in growing foodstuff and earning money for himself. The family in this manner spent several years with Ghagari Majhi, When Urvasi, for that was the name of Madhava's sister, had reached the marriageable age, the family migrated to Dhuwāhāt in search of a suitable Kāyastha young man. Dhuwāhāt was within the Ahom kingdom and Ahom kings allowed the Bhuvas to settle For some years Dhuwāhāt virtually remained a Bhūyā settlement. Govindagiri gave his daughter to a youngman named Gayāpāni whom afterwards Śankara renamed as Rāmadāsa in consideration of his devotion to Rāma. Gayāpāni was a man of some means and he offered to take the burden of the family of his fatherin-law. Thus relieved the old man remembered his native village Bāndukā. He started for Bāndukā with Mādhava. His wife remained with Gayapani at Dhuwahat.

So far Mādhava got his education in the school of adversity only. At Bāṇḍukā Govindagirī made proper arrangements for his formal schooling. He received training in the vocation of his caste (Kāyasthikā vṛtti) and the humanities too were not neglected.

Govindagirī died after a few years of his arrıval at Bāndukā. Mādhava started for Dhuwāhāt to inform his mother of her recent widowhood. When it remained only a few days' rowing to Dhūwāhāt he perchance got the news of his mother's sudden illness. Naturally his anxiety knew no bounds and he made up his mind to propitiate Mother Durgā by offering two white goats on the occasion of the next autumnal worship. His mother, however, had come round before he reached Dhūwābāt. When the autumn set in Mādhava gave a few rupees to Rāmadāsa, his brother-in-law, for buying two white goats.

By this time Śańkaradeva had come and settled at Dhuwāhāṭ with a band of followers. Rāmadāsa too had already accepted Śańkara as his religious guide and naturally he could not relish the idea of sacrificing animals much less buying the victims himself. But he, by himself, was no match for Mādhava to argue his case against the futility of Devī-worship and, therefore, animal sacrifice. He took Mādhava to Śańkaradeva and introduced him. Śańkaradeva greeted Mādhava with a winning smile, for after all, the handsome youngman was no other than Mādhava the son of Mano Āiti, his niece. It was not a courtesy visit and they at once plunged into a religious debate whether Devi-worship was at all necessary much less sacrificing animals to her. Sankara had to argue for hours, it is stated in the Carita-puthis, to convince the youth that if supreme Visnu was propitiated one no longer stood in need of going for other gods. It is further stated that a quatrain from the Bhāgavata wrought the miracle at last. Sankaradeva quoted, "Just as watering at the root of a tree nourishes the trunk, branches and twigs and just as different senses thrive if the vital life is maintained so when one worships Acyuta he worships all other gods". The authority of the Bhāgavata was unquestionable in those days. Mādhava found himself helpless before this statement, so clear and unmistakable. He at once prostrated himself before Sankara and this was by way of homage from a siṣya to his guru. The quatrain from the Bhāgavata was only instrumental in winning over the resolute youth. It was something more. Who knows the same quatrain would not have fallen on deaf ears had it come from a lesser personality!

Next day Mādhavadeva received formal initiation at the feet of Sankaradeva, and from that day onward he identified himself wholly with the mission of his guru the spread of Ekaŝarana Nāmadharma. He was a bachelor when he met Śankaradeva for the first time and remained so for the rest of his life. He devoted his life to the cause of Nāma-dharma, and served his guru with such zeal and earnestness as became proverbial with the later generation of his followers. He was a constant associate of Śańkaradeva and accompanied him during the latter's two pilgrimages. Nevertheless his strong individuality remained unimpaired.

Mādhavadeva became the head of the newly formed religious community at the express wish of Sańkaradeva at his death-bed. Sańkara did not delegate the authority of administering śarana (formal initiation) to any of his disciples. With Dămodara and Harideva, however, the case was different. They were specially deputed to preach Nāma-dharma among Brāhmaṇas in particular. Both of them carried their work with untiring zeal. Soon the disciples, specially of Dāmodara, began to swell in number. Dāmodara held Sańkara in high esteem. In fact the latter was the impetus of all his activities but he could not persuade himself to show the same respect to Mādhavadeva when the latter became the religious head. Mādhava too was uncompromising in this respect. He could not tolerate the slightest tendency towards minimising the over-all authority of Sańkaradeva and for that matter of himself. Dāmodara refused to accept any work other than the Bhā-gavata as the first authority, not even Sankara's writings.4 He adopted a liberal attitude towards Vedic rites and formalities and image-worship.5 This was more than what Mādhava and his followers could tolerate. Thus began a rift in the lute which within a year of Sankaradeva's death culminated in a complete schism.

Mādhava did not think it wise to confine the authority of administering Sarana to himself alone. He selected some of his followers and invested them with proper authority to admit disciples and offer sarana to neophytes in the name of the great guru. This of course did not take place at a time. His followers received ājňā (formal deputation) at different times. Of these Mathurā Ātā of Barpeta, Bar Viṣṇu Ātā of Dakṣinpār (south bank of the Brahmaputra), Gopāla Ātā of Bhawānipura (near Barpeta), Padma Ātā of Kamalābāri, Lakṣmīkānta Ātā and his nephew Rāmacaraņa stand foremost. These selfless devotees carried the banner of Nāma-dharma to different parts of the land, founded satras which as centre of Vaisnava religion and culture still occupy an important position in the Assamese social scheme. There were several Bhakats of tribal origin. They assumed Hindu names after Sarana. Mādhavadeva in his Nāmaghoṣā alludes to them several times.⁶ It is however difficult to say what status these tribal disciples actually enjoyed in the general assembly of bhakats. It is true that one or two such tribal bhakats established satras and a few of these still survive. Curiously enough their descendants now far from being proud of their tribal origin give a different account altogether.

Some Brāhmaņs presumably Śāktas brought allegations before the Koc king Raghudeva that Mādhava was preaching against Devi-worship and the authority of the Vedas and Brahmans. Now the Koc kings were open to all sorts of religious influence, nevertheless they regarded Kāmākhyā as the guardian deity of the kingdom. Any disrespect towards the deity was considered as an act equivalent to treason. So Raghudeva issued orders for immediate search and arrest of Madhavadeva. Madhava was brought to Vijayanagar, the capital of Raghudeva. He was treated however with due respect. He was a prisoner guest of Raghudeva for some days but after a due enquiry was again set free. After some days he was again directed to remove his headquarters to Hājo, the seat of the famous temple of Hayagrīva Mādhava. Even at Hājo he could not pass his days in peace and soon became a victim of royal suspicion. So he made up his mind to leave the kingdom of Raghudeva. Accordingly he crossed the river Soņkoş. The king of Koc Behār Lakṣmīnārāyaṇa received him most respectfully. Mādhavadeva spent his last days in Koc Behār. He was there for about three years. This was the most peaceful period of his life. He completed his Nāmaghoṣā the crowning glory of his literary activities during this time. The last part of the Nāmaghoṣā clearly reveals a blissful state of the poet's mind. His death was quite sudden. He dropped down while changing his clothes and within a short time breathed his last with the Holy Name in his lips. It was in the year 1596.

4. Daityari 66, 10-12.

Ramacarana, Sankara-carita 3900 — 3903. Karmira dharmira mata dharilaha yai Kali yuga tāka ācaraņe gati nai.

^{6.} Garo Bhota Yabana Harira nāma lai - Nāmghoṣā 473. Rāma buli tare Miri Asama Kachāri; - Ibid, 501.

So long Sankaradeva was alive none of his followers, not even Mādhavadeva, had the authority of conferring ordination on desiring entrants. Such men were brought before Sankaradeva who only could administer formal Sarana. The Sankara-carita of Rāmacaraṇa gives a full list of the new entrants who were presented by Nārayaṇa one of the Sankara's associates. Mādhavadeva, however, thought it prudent to delegate his authority to some of his associates of genuine devotion and religious zeal, specially when the rival group of Dāmodara was doing good work by appointing deputies. Sankara-carita of Rāmacaraṇa relates an incident how Nārāyaṇa roused Mādhava to activity by pointing out the example of Dāmodaradeva in this respect. This saved the organisation from stagnation, which otherwise would have been the result had authority remained solely with the head of the hierarchy.

Mādhavadeva was responsible for the raising of the Sāstra—the Book embodying the Holy Name—to the pedestal in complete exclusion of the idol. Sankaradeva relegated idol-worship (arccana) to the background bringing Sravana and Kīrtana to the forefront,⁹ whereas Mādhava wiped it completely out of the picture.
It was Mādhavadeva who introduced the system of Thāpanā which Ramacarana, Śankara-carita 2903 — 2936

 Nārāyane āni āni bhakata karāilā.

^{8.} Ibid 3956 - 3962.

Sankaradeva — Prathama Skandha — 38.
 Yadyapi bhakati navabidha Mādavar Sravana kīrtana tāto mahā sresthatar Arccana bandana dhyāna samastate kari Yasa kirtanata āti tusta honta hari.

means the Holy Book on the pedestal. But unlike the Granth-Sahib of the Sikhs the puthi or the Thāpanā need not be worshipped with formalities. When Padma Ata the youngest of his favourite disciples was going to take leave of Mādhava at Koc Behār after a short visit the latter presented him with a copy of Nāma-mālikā, his last work, and said, "This is my last work and you are the youngest of my disciples. So take this book and you will find me here. So instal it on the thāpana. You will find Sankara in his Daśama and Kīrtana and me in my Ratnāvalī and Nāmghoṣā." 10

The religious principle responsible for this emphasis on the Holy Book is not far to seek. The name and Hari are identical, 11 and as such the name is not merely a group of sounds but it is a living entity (caitanya). The Book in as much as it embodies the name deserves to be held as caitanya. Moreover the Book represents the guru through his words. Mādhavadeva did not nominate anybody as the supreme head of the community but in a message to Gopāla Ātā sometime before his death he reiterated his decision not to nominate anybody as his successor, and asked his disciples to seek him in Nāmaghoṣā which would solve their problems. 12

With Mādhavadeva devotion to his guru was a part of his Sādhanā. This influenced the later Mahāpuruṣīyā Sādhana to a great extent and sometimes led to over-emphasis particularly with a section of his followers known as kāla samhati.

So far as he himself was concerned Mādhavadeva preferred to remain a celibate by choice but celibacy formed no part of his teachings. Nevertheless his example inspired many to take the life of celibacy, which ultimately led to the introduction of compulsory celibacy in many satras.

The most important contribution which Mādhavadeva made to the growth of Vaiṣṇavism in Assam is that he completed the religious exegesis of the sect. Like his guru he too was a prolific writer. He wrote six playlets, rendered Bhaktiratnāvalī and Adikāṇḍa into metrical Assamese, composed several poetical works including Nāmaghosā. A gifted musician himself he contributed about 200 songs to the hymnology of the sect. They are employed in the private and congregational services whether daily (nitya Bezbaroa, Lakshminath, Śriśeńkaradeva äru Śrimādhavadeva — p. 341.

Yei nāma sei hari jānā niṣṭha kari" — Nāmaghośā 514.

Goswami, Tirthanath, ed. Śri Śri Gópaladeva Carita, pp. 61-70.
 See also Daityāri, Gurucarita, ed. Rajmohan Nath, p. 382 (73, 49-50).

prasanga) or occasional (naimittika prasanga). There are a few works such as Amūlya-ratna and Bhūṣan-herowā which although popularly attributed to him are of doubtful authenticity. Of these the first three are definitely not by Mādhavadeva. They contain references to persons and events belonging to so late a period as the eighteenth century. There are many songs which go by the name of Mādhavadeva, but a careful examination would lead us to a contrary supposition.

The literary career of Mādhavadeva began sometime during the middle of the sixteenth century. The Janmarahasya was the first work from his pen. It is a small work of about 300 verses. It relates the story of creation and destruction of the world and thus establishes the omnipotence of God. The book was written at the express wish of Rāṇī Bhuvaneśwarī, the wife of Cilārāya. She wanted a simple book on the subject for the use of womendevotees.

The metrical rendering of Bhākti-ratnāvalī of Visnupurī comes next. Visnupuri figures prominently in the Vaisnava tradition and literature of Assam. The metrical translations of Bhakti-ratnavali is regarded as one of the four sacred books of the Mahapurusīyā sect.14 Nāmghosā begins with the Assamese rendering of the benedictory verse of Kantimala-a commentary by the author himself. The story how Sankaradeva obtained a copy of this work is interesting. A certain Brahman scholar named Kanthabhūsana brought the work from Kāśi. The biographers relate different stories as to how Kanthabhūṣaṇa came upon the work, According to Daityāri, Kanthabhūsana bought the book at Kāśi.15 the work was not so famous at the middle of the 16th century that a scholar from Kamarupa would buy it in preference to other famous works. Rāmānanda says that the book was presented to Kanthabhūsana by Rāmabhatta, a disciple of Visnupuri,16 for the spread of the religion of the Bhagavata in Kamarupa. Bhusana Dvija's version does not differ much. Rāmacarana adds something more which gives the episode a legendary colour. All of them are at one with regard to the following: that Kanthabhūsana brought it from Kāśi and that he presented it to Sankaradeva and that a See my article 'Mādhavadevar Nāṭ Dukhan', in the Awahan.

 Medhi, Kaliram — Ankavali.

The other three books, are the Kirtan and Dasama Skandha by Sankaradeva and the Nāmāghoṣā by Mādhavadeva.

^{15.} Daityari, Gurucarita, chap. 39, (R. M. Nath ed.).

Rāmānanda — vv. 1424 — 1459.

disciple of Viṣṇupurī offered the book as a present. Saṅkaradeva was very glad to secure the book. His joy knew no bounds when he found the chapter on Ekaśaraṇa at the end. He at once entrusted Mādhava with the work of translating it into Assamese. Mādhavadeva did it so creditably that Saṅkara congratulated him with the following remark—"You have a remarkable hold over your pen, you can both elaborate and summarise with equal ease. I on my part can only make abridgments."

The fundamental teachings of Bhakti-ratnāvalī as revealed in the commentary and as may be gathered from the arrangement of the verses may be summed as follows—

- (1) Ekaśaraņa—i.e., surrendering oneself to the One and One alone, and there should be no compromise in matters of worship of gods other than supreme Viṣṇu.
- (2) The passion of servitude recommended as the mode of bhakti.
- (3) Śravana and Kīrtana are the two chief means of realising true bhakti.¹⁷
 - (4) Satsanga as an important factor of bhakti.

The book lays special emphasis on ekaśarana. Rāmānanda rightly observes that the purpose of taking the discussion on this topic to the end of the book is to attach the highest importance to ekaśarana in the scheme of Vaiṣṇava Sādhana.¹⁸

Bhakti-ratnāvalī is known simply as Ratnāvalī in Assamese. It was once regarded as the most difficult book because of the abstract nature of the verses in comparison to other narrative poems. The Assamese proverb Ka buliba nājāne ratnāvalī paḍhe, 'a man who cannot read the first letter ventures to read Rātnāvalī', is still used in ordinary conversation to criticise an act of impudence.

In translating the work Mādhava fully utilized the commentary Kāntimālā written by Viṣṇupurī himself. Viṣṇupurī in his

17. Nābhāji in his Bhaktamāl sums up the teachings of Viṣṇupuri as follows:

Bhāgavata dharma utanga Āna dharma ānana nadekhā Pītara paṭa taṭa vigata Niṣaka jyon kundana rekhā Kṛṇa kṛpa che kahi Beli satasaṅga dekhāyo

18. Rāmānanda — 1449-50

Savate kariya srestha ekanta sarana Garistha karane sese karicha bandhana, turn followed Śrīdhara Svāmī differing here and there only in minor points, and for that too he begs apology at the end of the work.¹⁹

Ādikāṇḍa: The next work is the metrical rendering of the first book of the Rāmāyaṇa. Mādhava Kandalī a pre-Sankaradeva poet rendered the whole Rāmāyaṇa into metrical Assamese. The copies of the Rāmāyaṇa and the Mahābhārata were preserved in Kāṇḍas or parvas in family collections. It is said that the first and the last book of the Rāmāyaṇa as translated by Mādhava Kandalī were iost during the troubled days of Kachārī raids. Sankaradeva therefore took up the task of completing the work and himself prepared the metrical rendering of the Uttarakāṇḍa directing Mādhava to do the Aḍikāṇḍa. Mādhavadeva did his part most successfully. The beauty of his Ādikāṇḍa lies in its elegant verses and homely similes.

19. As regards the date of Visnupuri there was same controversy in Indian Culture, Vol. V, pp. 101 and 107 and also in Dr. Biman Bihari Majumdhar's Caitanya cariter upādān, p. 563. The matter was again discussed by Dr. S. K. De in his Vainava Faith and Movement, p. 14. The question would not have been so perplexing if only the evidences from Assamese sources could be examined. See B. K. Barua's Date of Visnupuri Sannyasi in New Indian Antiquary, 1939.

The ground for fixing an early date for Visnupuri was that according to the biographers of Caitanya Mādhavendra Puri or Jayadhvaja was the guru of Visnupuri (Caitanya-caritāmṛta, 1. 9. 9-12, and Caitanya-maṅgal of Jayānanda, p. 34). The discussion was brought to a termination by Dr. S. K. De in a footnote to his Vaiṣṇava Faith and Movement. By quoting a colophon from a manuscript of Bhakti-ratnāvalī preserved in the Dacca University he proves that "apparently Puruṣottama was Viṣṇupuri's guru and not Jayadhvaja or Mādhavendrapuri". The colophon in question runs thus:

Iti Šrī Purusottama - caranāravinda - krpā-makaranda - bindupronmīlita - viveka - tairabhuktaparamahamsa - Šrī - Visnupurigrathita - Šrī bhāgavatamṛtābdhi - labdha - Šrī - bhaktiratnāvali kāntimālā samāptā.

The sixteenth-century Assamese rendering of Bhakti-ratnāvali contains a literal and complete translation of the above colophon, where also it is Purusottama who is described as the guru of Visnupuri. Here we have the evidence of one of the earliest copies of the work, for the Assamese Ratnāvali was completed towards the 6th decade of the 16th century. The copy was presented to Kanthabhūṣaṇa by a disciple of Viṣnupurī. So Viṣnupurī must have lived in the second part of the 15th and the first part of the 16th century. The Trihut tradition as reported by Hamilton (Purniya Report, 1809, p. 275) that a Samnyasī named Viṣnupurī lived there about three hundred years back goes to support the above date. So the story related in Bhaktamāl granth that Viṣnupurī wrote Bhakti-ratnāvalī at the request of Caitanya may not be without foundation.

The work nowhere reads like a translation. The appropriate use of Assamese proverbs with a slight touch of humour gives the work the flavour of an original work.

There are some portions in Ādikāṇḍa which present a case for genuine doubt as to the authorship of Mādhavadeva in respect of the whole work. The Ahalyā episode, for example, as related in Ādikāṇḍa differs greatly from the original. The lustful advances of Indra, description of their sexual enjoyment betray a low taste on the part of the poet. It is not warranted by the original too. The original quite decently passes over the matter in a few ślokas. It is difficult to suppose that so puritanic a writer like Mādhavadeva could indulge in such a low type of literary exercise. It is not unlikely that one or more minor poets in later times forced themselves in.

Rājasūya Yajña popularly known as Rājasūya was written between 1565 and 1568. Mädhava began the book before Sankaradeva left for Koc Behar but could complete it only afterwards. The aim of the book is to establish the supreme Godhood of Kṛṣṇa, Mādhava utilizes the episode of the Rājasūya sacrifice of the Pāṇḍavas for this purpose. Kṛṣṇa there is selected as the first guest to receive oblation, the solitary voice of Sisupala only dissenting. The poem opens with a beautiful description of Dvārakā and gives a detailed account of the daily life of Kṛṣṇa as a householder which, as Mādhava puts it, is only a show of worldliness on the part of God in human form in conjunction with his deceptive principle Yoga-māyā.30 The poem then takes us through a series of dramatic events and varied scenes to the court of Jarasandha where the famous duel between Bhima and Jarasandha is fought followed by a general amnesty of the prisoner kings which ultimately contributed towards the success of the Rajasuya sacrifice of Yudhisthira.

The book is written in the Kāvya style and may be regarded as one of the finest poems of the Vaiṣṇava age. Although a kāvya its beauty dies not in the use of appropriate alaṅkāras and in fact Mādhava rarely indulges in complicated alaṅkāras or word-tricks. His is the art of natural description (svabhāvokti) with his personality and perspective infused into it. The descriptions of Dvārakā and Indraprastha, of the march of Śrī Kṛṣṇa to Indraprastha, the account of the duel between Jarāsandha and Bhīma contain a sonorousness, dignity and grace which impart to the work a rare poetical value. With Rājasūya the first phase of his literary life was over and the next phase is marked by the playlets and Bargītas.

Rājasūya — 25.
 Yetikṣaane Kṛṣṇe yogamāyāka āgrahi Manuṣya ceṣṭāka dekhāi thākā līlā kari.

Mādhavadeva composed a series of playlets. Some of them appear to be spurious. The internal evidences preclude any assumption in favour of Mādhavadeva's authorship so far as Rās-jhumurā, Bhūṣan-herowā, Brahma-mohan and Koṭorā-khe-lowā are concerned²¹ The remaining genuine plays number five; they are Arjun-bhañjan, Cordharā, Pimparā-gucuwā, Bhojana-vihāra, and Bhūmi-loṭowā. The Carita-puthis mention two more but they are not available at present. Of the genuine ones the last four are called Jhumurās, and the first is a yātrā or simply an Anka.

The word jhumura represents an extended meaning of the word Jhumur which is a kind of song sung in chorus to a short tāla (rhythm).22 It is employed in a group dance generally performed by women in Chotanagpur district and some parts of Orissa.23 Originally a group dance of women jhumur later on came to mean a short performance where females mainly took part. On examination of the genuine jhumuras of Madhavadeva we find that in all of them the themes represented deal with the childish pranks of Kṛṣṇa, the grand naughty boy. The gopis and Yasoda take the chief part. There is no other male part except that of the Sutradhara. This is the reason why the term is not applicable in the case of Arjun-bhanjan, which is not confined to female characters only. It is not unlikely that these jumuras were originally meant for female performers before a female audience. There is a type of semi-dramatic performance called pacati prevalent in Assam even now. It is purely a function of the village women held just after the Janmastami festival. An episode from the child-life of Kṛṣṇa is represented through dialogues and songs. It is not known whether Mādhavadeva was connected in any way with the origin of this institution but there is no doubt that his jhumuras provided an incentive to the growth and spread. Imitative dramatists in later days produced literary counterfits and Medhi, Kaliram — Ankāvalī pp. lxxxv — vii. The writer's article -- 'Mādhavadevar Nāt Dukhan' in Āwāhan, 1540.

^{22.} The Assamese metre 'Jhumuri' consisting of eight syllables in each line is reminiscent of the jhumur song. The metre being short and rhythmic can be fitted to a jhumur song.

One may witness this dance in the tea gardens of Assam where there are Mundari and Oriya labourers.

passed them on as true coins. They wrote short plays, appended the name of Mādhava in the colophon and the bhanitā lines of the songs and passed them as jhumurās, as if any playlet with Mādhavadeva's name in it could be a jhumurā. Thus the original significance of the word was lost sight of. Daityāri too is a victim of this confusion when he calls Dadhimathan a jhumurā.

The frolicsome activities of Boy-Kṛṣṇa as described in the Bhagavata inspired many later poets to try their talents in this direction. Beautiful couplets based on some amusing situation from their life of Child-Kṛṣṇa were produced. They acquired much popularity within a short time and became a part of the floating poetry of the period. Some such couplets are preserved in a few anthologies. The Padyāvalī24 of Rūpa-Goswāmī is an anthology of this nature. The Kṛṣṇa-Karṇāmṛta of Līlāśuka is another such collection of devotional lyric stanzas. Some of the stanzas which. Mādhavadeva-utilized as the source for the themes of his playlets appear in the Kṛṣṇa-Karṇāmṛta.25 Curiously enough the stanzas adapted by Madhava for his dramas are found in the expanded recensions. There are several other collections of similar verses called Sumangala-stotra, Bilvamangala Stotra, Kṛṣṇa-Stotra and so forth. The verses taken by Mädhavadeva appear in the Bilvamangala-Stotra also Lilāśuka and Bilvamangala, it is believed, are two names of the same person. Scholars are of opinion that there were more than one Bilvamangala. Anyway it is quite certain that these stanzas, universally popular as they were, became more important than their author or authors. That is why Mādhava felt no necessity of mentioning the source of these stanzas and indeed there is hardly any scope for doing so in a drama.26 These stanzas appear either as introductory verses or as sloka-portions27 of the dramas. The theme dramatised is described in the couplet in a nutshell and as such serves as the Nandi too; for according to dramaturgy Năndi should covertly allude to the plot (Vastu-Nirdeśa).

The playlets of Mādhavadeva may be compared to the small one-act dramas of today so far as presentation of the plot and the ^{24.} Ed. S. K. De, Dacca Univ. Oriental Publ. Series, Dacca 1934.

Ed. S. K. De, Dacca Univ. Oriental Publ. 1938. The southern recension—Published from Sri Vani-Vilasa press, Srirangam.

^{26.} The complete information regarding these stanzas with exact reference to their source (Bilvamangalastotra) will be found in Kaliram Medhi's "Ankāvali", p. 386.

^{27.} The Śloka portions of an Ańkiyā drama introduces the subject matter of the next change.

maintaining of the unity of impression are concerned. It is not possible to detect in these jhumuras all the sandhis that go to make a full plot. The drama begins with the climax and the denouement consists in the final impression rather than in the solution of the different turn of events. Mādhavadeva's was a unique art of leading the audience to the aesthetic experience of bhakti through the sentiment of filial love. The filial love in a man is sought to be roused and sublimated to a love of a higher plane, of God. Madhava never forgets to hint at the supreme Godhood of the Boy whose boyish nature he delineates in a masterly way. Madhava was a celibate and spent the major part of his life away from the family atmosphere and yet curiously enough his works stand unsurpassed in the whole field of Assamese literature, ancient and modern, in point of delineating childnature and expressing the aesthetic emotion of Vatsalya. Is it the subconscious yearning of a childless celibate that manifested itself as 'a joy forever' in his literary productions? This, of course, is a subject for those who revel in the study of psychology in literature.

Like his guru Mādhava too used the artificial language that went by the name of Brajāvalī. The language however appears to have lost much of its former status of a new-fangled language of poesy. The songs and dialogues are in Brajavali but the descriptive or narrative portions meant for plain recital are in Assamese. This was an innovation made by Mādhavadeva and therefore not found in the dramas of Sankaradeva. Mādhavadeva cut down the use of songs and Sanskrit ślokas to the minimum and thus avoided harping on the narration of intervening events not represented in the drama. The whole-time Sütradhara is there but he plays a less prominent part in comparison to the sutradhara of the dramas of Sankaradeva so as to leave scope for fuller dialogues. As a result of all this the playlets of Madhavadeva are free from monotony and overbearing presence of the Sütradhara - a defect which has taken away much of the dramatic effect of Rāsakrīdā and Kāli-damana of Sankaradeva.

The plays and Bargītas of Mādhavadeva were written during the second period of his literary life which began with the death of Śańkaradeva and ended with his departure for Koc Behār in 1693. The Bargītas are devotional songs like Bhajanas fitted to one or other rāga. They are called Bargītas in analogy of such homely terms as Bar-Sabāh (The great congregation), Bar-bhakat (great devotee). These songs are held as 'bar' because they are affiliated to a higher class of music (Mārga-sangīta). The other songs employed in Nāma-Prasaṅga are fitted to crude and simple indigenous melodies (Deśī-Sangīta). In fact the words 'gīta' and 'nāma' bear different connotation in Assamese. The former means a song fitted to a rāga and the latter means simply a composition meant for recital in a simple tune. The musical pattern of the rāgas of the Bargītas show little affinity to the Hindustani music of today. This is probably due to the fact that these rāgas came to Assam long before the renaissance of Hindustani music under the Moghuls. So the rāgas represented by the Bargītas preserve the pre-Moghul form of Hindustani music. It is regrettable however that for want of proper training on the part of the gāyanas the Bargīta has undergone considerable deterioration.

The Bargitas may be classified according to the traditional scheme.28 This scheme takes the subject-matter of the songs into consideration and so also its employment in the daily songs services, Thus there are Jaganar Gitas which describe Yasoda's entreaties to arouse Kṛṣṇa from his sleep in the morning. Then we have calanar gita. Kṛṣṇa in these songs leads his cows to the grazing field. There are others describing the dol sports of Kṛṣṇa and they are known as "dauler gita". There are definite rules, determined by convention, as to the proper employment of the different classes of Bargitas. One cannot sing a Jaganar gita at the time of midday service. As indirect devotional lyrics these songs reveal the heart of the God-intoxicated soul of a bhakta poet. If viewed from this standpoint we have two sets of Bargitas before us. They represent two stages of spiritual development in Madhavadeva. One is characterised by delicate sensuousness of a bhakta poet for whom Kṛṣṇa is no longer a legendary cowherd boy but a living and charming personality. He feels the pleasing presence of this Boy, enjoys his touch, takes keen delight in his personal charm and beauty. At another time he suffers the agony of separation because that beautiful face is no longer before him. The following is a typical Bargita of the class in question.

"Oh, how shall I narrate the tale of my sorrow. I have not seen that beautiful face. My life flows out of me. As a result of past merits I got my Syāma who is the source of all good qualities by my side, but cruel fate has taken him away from me. I cannot live without Kānu the beautiful. My mind becomes restless at the very utterance of the name Syāma. The day somehow I spend in misery but night only lingers and lingers. The moon, sandal-paste or even the southern breeze turn hostile it appears. I cannot sit calm; nor do I know where to go, my mind is restless. Friends, let us simply curse that Kānu."

^{28.} Sri Rajmohan Nath in his edition of Mādhava's bargītas makes an attempt to classify these songs according to various sentiments expressed in them in imitation of the traditional classification of Bengali padas. Such a classification, however, serves no purpose so far as the bargītas are concerned, for the Assamese Vaispavas attach little importance to erotic mysticism and as such to the different stages of bhāvas.

The second set of Bargitas is characterised by calm intentness of a quiescent soul. We feel in these songs the tranquillity of the morning sea after a long stormy night. The turbulent river has reached the sea to merge her identity in the calm and vastness that ensure complete security. The proud scholar is 'Dina' and 'Mūrukha' now surrendering himself completely at the feet of his ever-compassionate Lord (Dayār Thākur Yadumani). There are about fifty Bargītas of this nature and the following is one of them.

"O Hari, my kind Lord Yadumani, O Ram, this meanest of the souls sings your name aloud. Please be gracious, Nārāyaṇa, for my mind is fickle. May it remain fixed at your feet. A certain Brahman, Ajāmila, stupid and sinful though he was, by mistake called for his son. This much alone freed him from Karma and he attained Vaikuṇṭha. This of course the whole world knows. I am sinful, perhaps thousand times worse—a fallen soul, but your grace lifts up a fallen soul. This is what I am banking upon."

In the elegance, softness and music of his poetic diction as well as in point of richness of sentiment the Bargītas of Mādhavadeva will stand comparison with compositions of other master songwriters of India.

The second set of Bargītas mark the transition from the second to the third phase of Mādhavadeva's spiritual and therefore literary career. The note of fervent submission (śaraṇa) and quiescence (śānta) so predominent a characteristic in Nāmaghoṣā is already heard in these Bargītas. Mādhavadeva's vātsalya sādhana has landed him in śāta and dasya at the journey's end. Nāmaghoṣā is the magnum opus of his literary life and probably of the religious literature of the period.

Mādhavadeva wrote one more work during his stay at Koc Behār (1593-1596). It is the metrical rendering of a Sanskrit anthological work entitled Nāmamālikā. The work as the title implies, is not a garland of names but it extols the merits of the Holy Name. It is, however, an instance of literary side-slip. The book was prepared to order. Biru Kārji, an old minister of the king of Koc Behär, got a book from Orissa which somehow or other interested him. He requested Madhava to prepare a metrical translation of the book. Mādhavadeva obeyed his patron but the book itself did not appeal to him much and in fact he held a low opinion of it. The arrangement and the method of treatment, as he remarks at the beginning, are far from satisfactory.29 There was another reason why the book failed to have an appeal for him. The book gives an intolerably long list of the merits resulting from the singing of the Holy Name. This was what Madhava could not persuade himself to appreciate. According to him to sing the praise of Hari is an end by itself and one should not aspire after good results to be enjoyed here or hereafter. So when concluding the book he states his view in clear terms:

"Sing the name of Hari with joy. This and this alone is the precious wealth that a bhakta may reasonably aspire after." 30

We may, therefore, leave aside Nāmamālikā while making a survey of the last phase of Mādhavadeva's literary expression as it has hardly any bearing on the natural course of development in matters of thought, language and style of the original compositions of the last part of his life. We must turn to Nāmaghoṣā for this purpose.

Nāmaghoṣā is the record of religious experiences of a genuinely devoted soul and it may also be regarded as an expression of spiritual craving of a whole generation of men stirred to a religious quest by diverse thought-currents and practices of the day. It embodies the teachings of his guru, his own findings after a careful study of the Sāstras and above all the truth he realised in his own heart. His last message to Gōpālā Ātā of Bhawānīpur runs thus:

"Read Nāmaghoṣā every day for whatever I have received from Sankaradeva and whatever I could gather as a result of my study of the scriptures and above all the truth of my own realisation have been incorporated in this work. So do not fail to keep this book by your side and a careful study of it will lead you to perfect enlightenment."³¹

- Nāhike srākhala grantha āti nirarthak
 Āra pada kari kone milāibe kautuk Nāmalmalika, v. 10.
- Kariyo ānande Hari nāmara kīrtana Ehimāne mātra bhakatara mahādhana. Ibid 228.
- 31. Śri Śri Gopāladeva Carita; ed. Tirthanath Goswami, pp. 61-70.

Mādhavadeva began Nāmaghoṣā after Sankaradeva had left for Koc Behār. The story goes that Sankaradeva on the eve of his journey directed Mādhava to write a book which would be like a jujube fruit (Skt. Badari), soft outside but hard at the core within; meaning thereby that the abstruse teachings of Nāmadharma should be presented in an attractive manner in soft and elegant verses. Mādhava obeyed his guru but could not make much progress so long as he was at Barpetā. His life at Koc Behār was more or less of a recluse and it was there that the major part of the book was written between 1593-1596. He could complete the work shortly before his death. Even the closest of his disciples knew little of this work till after his death. The message quoted above perplexed Gopāla Ātā to a great extent since he was not aware of a work entitled Nāmaghoṣā till then.32.

The word Ghosā means a refrain, the first verse of a song repeated every time in chorus. This verse indicates also the tune in which the remainder is to be sung. In this respect it is an equivalent of the words such as dhurā, dhūa (skt. Dhruva) or dihā (Skt. dīśā). The word is from √ghus, to chant aloud.23 Originally ghosū meant a song sung aloud. This shade is still retained in the word banghosā which means a love song sung by cowherd boys in woody nooks and villages. During the Vaisnava period the term acquired a slightly different meaning, i.e., a burden of a devotional song sung aloud in chorus. Such a ghoṣā appears at the top of each chapter of Kirtana by Sankaradeva. The couplets in Nāmghoṣā were written in imitation of these burden verses of Kirtana. There are altogether a thousand such verses and hence the work is otherwise known as Hejāri Ghosā. The last part of the book consists of the names and attributes of visnu fitted to convenient metres for the purpose of singing in private or congregational services. This part of the book is called namachanda and its importance is very great from the point of ceremonial aspects of Nāmadharma. This part of the book therefore was responsible for determining the title Nāmaghoṣā for the collections of a thousand ghoṣā,34

32. Ibid, p. 73.

 cf. (a) Eri Āna Kām, Bolā Rāma Rām Ghusioka ghane ghana

(b) Sadāya dākiyā ghusiyo Hari

We find similar use in Sanskrit and Prakrta.

^{34.} The manuscripts of the Nāmaghoṣā do not show uniformity in numbering the verses. The same sequence too is not maintained. Whatever the process of numbering may be every manuscript reaches the number 1000 or 1001 at the end.

166

There are three sections in Nāmaghoṣā. The first section deals with the doctrinal aspect of Nāmadharma. The second section called Saraṇa-chanda is a collection of lyrical stanzas of self-effacing devotion. The third section as stated above is a series of metrical arrangements of the names and attributes of Viṣṇu meant for song services of the sect.

The first section, which may be called the Ghoṣā proper, extols Nāma-dharma as the universal religion³⁵ It is simple in practice, catholic in views and monotheistic in adherence. The cardinal teachings of Nāmaghoṣā may be summed up as follows:

- (i) The Ekadeva doctrine of the Mahāpuruṣa is reiterated again with all the emphasis at the command of the author. Kṛṣṇa is the one and true God, his word the Bhāgavata is the only authoritative scripture.³⁶ He is the only one capable of effecting cessation of misery on the part of created beings, for he lords over time and māyā.³⁷
- (ii) The name (nāma) and Kṛṣṇa (Nāmī) are identical and hence the Nāme is a living entity. It is also full of Ānanda or rasa (Nāma-ānanda, Nāma-rasa). Nāma alone can lead a devotee to ultimate bliss.
- (iii) Bhakti is the ultimate end of life. It is paramapuruṣārtha. The four other objects, namely dharma, artha, kāma and mokṣa are merely subservient to Bhakti.³⁸ The Nāmaghoṣā opens with a homage to the bhakat who is indifferent to mukti and the first section ends with the definition of a true (ekānta) bhakat, a bhakat who ceases to have any desire for four objects of human life and who has merged himself in the wonderful Name.³⁰ In fact Mādhava is never tired of repeating the doctrine throughout the
 - Nāmghoṣā Published by Barkataki and Co, Jorhat. v. 500 501 Hari Nāme nāhike niyama adhikāri Rāma buli tare Miri Asama Kachāri.
 - Eka khāni mātra šāstra niṣṭha.
 Devakī nandane kailā yāka Devo ekamātra Devakī devīra sūta. Nāmghoṣā v. 665.
 - Kṛṣṇa eka deva dukha-hārī
 Kāla māyādiro adhikāri
 Kṛṣṇa bine sreṣṭha deva Nāhi nāhi āra
 Ibid 586.
 - Caripuruşūrtha tāhāra nijarā
 Hari nāme mula-dhārā Ibid 372.
 - Ekānta bhakta jara hay maha adabhuta Hari-guņa nāma-may Ibid 684.

book.40 Complete submission at the feet of Kṛṣṇa (śaraṇa) is the summum bonum of human life.

- (iv) Purity of heart is the chief pre-requisite of progress in Nāmadharma. Purity again can be attained only with the help of the Name.
- (v) Nāmadharma is open to all. In former days the precious Name of Hari was a matter for secrecy but Sankaradeva out of compassion for the human race made it available to all.41 Every man can hope to develop his personality to the greatest possible height (narottama) by resorting to the praise of Kṛṣṇa.42

Theology in the Nāmaghoṣā is turned into elegant poetry by the magic touch of Madhava, the poet. Towards the end of the book however the theologian is no more, the poet too shrinks to the background and it is the mystic alone who shines. Mādhavadeva began as a scholastic theologian, turned a poet and ended as a mystic. His literary output is a faithful record of this progress. In Janmarahasya, Bhaktiratnāvalī and Ādikānda we find him as a scholar theologian busy in explaining and translating books dealing with Vaisnava legends and doctrines. It marks the preparatory stage of a future religious preacher. In his Rājasūya the theologian gives into the poet and in his dramas he is primarily a poet. The Bargitas record the turmoil of the dark night of his soul. When we reach Nāma-ghoṣā, specially its śaraṇa section, we feel the quiescence of a calm and beautiful first light. The sense of self almost disappears, he enjoys the blissful state of sarana, his only concern being the security of this state for the future. The following is an exquisite example which describes Mādhava in the sarana state.

"You are the scion of the Yadus and so also the joy of the Yadus. You are the Lord of maya and hence the dispeller of Māyā^{42a}. You are Nārāyaṇa the untinged eternal, in you I have found complete refuge.

40. Ibid. 1, 77, 124, 251, 288, 328, 532, 650, 651, 684, 742, 995, etc., etc.

41. Parama amulya ratna Harira namara pera Ati gupta svarupe āchil

Lokaka kypäye Hari Śankara svarupe asi

Muda bhängi samastake dil.

42. Kewale Krsnara Kirtane karaya Samastake narottama

Ibid. 349.

42a. The original is "Mādhava Madhusūdana". Mādhavadeva in the namanvaya chapter of his Namaghosa explains the epithet 'Madhusudana' as follows: Māyā-apparently pleasant (Madhumati) drives every soul mad. Since God destroys this Madhu or māyā he is called Mādhusūdana.

Compassionate Lord! bestower of all fortunes! O Hari, leave me not alone this time for at your crimson feet I have taken refuge. Forsooth I am at your feet.

Ah, I am at the feet of Hari, Ah Nārāyaṇa, blessed today is this human birth of mine. Ah, Hari, Ah Nārāyaṇa."

Mādhavadeva's mysticism consists in complete self surrender to Kṛṣṇa who is the compassionate master (Dayāśīla deva) and a bosom triend (Prāna Bāndhava). The relationship between Kṛṣṇa and himself is not that of a lover and the beloved but of a kind master and his selfless servant. His final attainment consists not in complete union or self-annihilation but in a state of security and bliss under the sheltering shadow of his master's feet (carana chatrara chāyā).43 He yearns for a perpetual joy of bhakti even at the released state hereafter.44 It is the rasa or emotional ecstasy of bhakti that constitutes his sole concern, Nāmaghoṣā begins with a prayer for such bhakti, that is rasa (rasamayi bhakati), and ends with the confession that Madhava the ignorant (murukha) steeped in that rasa goes on singing.45 'The term 'mūrukha' which Mādhava finds pleasure in using again and again with respect to himself does not merely convey the characteristic humility of a Vaisnava poet, It has a deeper meaning. In calling himself a mūrukha he shows indifference to Jñāna or enlightenment. It is the joy of bhakti which should be the primary concern with a true bhakta and to attain it he need not necessarily be a jñānī. Mādhavadeva's approach is straight and there is no complexity in the psychological mode adopted by him. So symbols have hardly any place in his writings and this remark applies specially to the Ghoşā. His was a rare satibana and a very few seekers of God have been able to raise the passion of divine servitude to such a glorious height of mystic ecstasy.

^{43.} Tbid 129, 312, 313.etc.

^{44. 310, 333, 337} etc.

^{45.} Ehu rasa Mādhava mūrukha - mati gāwe. Ibid 1001.

RĀMA SARASVATĪ AND HIS WORKS

BY

J. SARMA

Rāma Sarasvatī occupies a place of eminence among the writers who flourished in Assam in the sixteenth century. The writers of this age are without exception connected with the Vaisnava movement and the subject-matter of their writings are all drawn from the epics and the Puranas. The Krsna cult as propagated in the Bhagavata Purana was the common theme and even those who drew from the epics were greatly influenced by this Purāna. Rāma Sarasvatī was a devout Vaisnava. He made verse-renderings of some books of the Mahabharata and has also preserved for us matters not to be found in the Mahābhārata. It has not been found possible to ascertain whether the subjectmatter of his original work was drawn from Sanskrit sources, or from legends and traditions current in this part of the country or whether it was in his own invention. But it is true that stories like Manicandra, Aśvakarna, Sindhuyātrā are not to be met with elsewhere and they may very well be called 'the matter of Assam'. One of the most voluminous of writers, Rāma Sarasvatī retains his popularity even to-day.

The works of Rama Sarasvati have not yet been properly edited and published, although manuscripts, in some cases centuries old, are still available. The immense popularity of his works has led enterprising publishers to get them printed primarily for profit; but they have also thereby preserved from oblivion and brought to light works by an eminent writer which otherwise would have been lost. A few verses of Rāma Sarasvatī were first printed in Kāvyakusuma, an anthology of old Assamese poetry, edited in 1884 by late Rai Bahadur Gunābhirām Baruā. Attention to the life and poetry of Rāma Sarasvatī was drawn by writers in the Assamese journal Jonaki particularly by Ratneswar Mahanta. In this connection there was a controversy as to whether Rama Sarasvati of the Mahabharata fame and Ananta Kandali, a junior contemporary poet and disciple of Śrī Śankara-Deva, were one and the same person. This controversy spread over several years. Dinanath Bezbarua, Gunabhiram Barua, Kaliram Sarma Barua (who edited and published Jayadeva-kāvya, an Assamese rendering in verse of Gita-govinda), Lakshminath Bezbarua and some others held that these two Vaiṣṇava poets were identical. But the matter has been almost finally settled. Hemchandra Goswami, in his Descriptive Catalogue of Assamese Manuscripts, thus sums up: "Many writers have confused him (Ananta Kandali) with Rāma Sarasvatī which is evidently not warranted by facts" (p. 36). But the unique character of Rāma Sarasvatī's writings was, however, emphasised by Dr. B. Kakati in a few articles in Cetanā in 1920-21, subsequently published in his Purāṇi Asamiyā Sāhitya.

Events of his life.—We have no detailed and connected accounts of the life of Rāma Sarasvatī. What little we have are to be gleaned from his writings. He describes himself somewhere as a native of Camariyā in Kāmarūpa, elsewhere of Pacariyā.

Kāmarūpa madhya grāma nāhika upām tāte grāma bhailā Camariyā yāra nāma.

(Bhīşmaparva, 1350)

(In Kāmarūpa there is a village without a parallel, known as Camariyā.)

Grāmamadhye sāroddhāra

Pacariyā nāma yāra

Kaliyuge śrestha likhe yāka, Brāhmaņa sakale nita Bhāga

Bhāgavata aviśrāma

Carca kare pätiya sabhaka

(Virāṭaparva: quoted by D. N. Bezbarua in his Asamiyā Bhāṣā āru Sāhityar Burañī)

[Counted as the matchless in Kaliyuga is a village known as Pacariya — the best among villages;

there the Brāhmaṇas assemble for continuous holy discussion on the Bhāgavata.]

Gopīnātha Pāṭhaka, son of Rāma Sarasvatī, has rendered into Assamese verse two books of the Mahābhārata. In Droṇaparva he describes himself as the grandson of a wise and pious Brāhmaṇa, Bhīmasena Dvija of Chinākona in Pāṭcaurā and son of Rāma Sarasvatī, Pāṭhaka of Prince Sukladhvaja. At any rate, the poet's father was a resident of the district either of Kāmrūp or Darrang. As for the poet, it was quite possible that he shifted from place to place along with his royal patrons as the prevailing political conditions of the time demanded.

While Gopînātha Pāṭhaka describes Bīmasena Dvija as the father of Rāma Sarasvatī, the poet himself however, speaks of his father as Kavicūdāmaṇi:

Vipramadhye sārodhāra Kavicūdāmaņi yāra Nāma bhailā kula prakāšaka

Adyāpi yaśasyā railā upāsante kāla gailā Bhaktibhāve śrihariharaka (Prabhu Mādhavaka).¹

Udyogaparva, verse 184.

[Kavicudāmaṇi was the choicest among Brāhmaṇas; his very name shed lustre on the family; his fame still remains as one who passed his days as an ardent devotee of Hari and Hara (Lord Mādhava.]

> Sehi grāmeśvara bhailā Kavicūdāmaņi Panditagaņara madhye yāka agragaņi.

> > -Bhīşmaparva, v. 1351.

(Kavicudāmaņi, the lord of the village was reckoned as the chief among the scholars.)

This discrepancy is easily reconciled. Bhīmasena Dvija might have been the real name of the poet's father, and Kavicūḍāmaṇi was just a title as was usual in those days. Rāma Sarasvatī himself, as we shall see, acquired several such titles for his great learning and literary talent.

Kavicūdāmaņi had two sons, Kavicandra and Rāma Sarasvatī, the younger, > Āta anantare tāra dui putra bhaila. Jyeştha bhailā Kavicandra āti śuddha-mati Tāhāna anuja bhailā Rāma Sarasvatī.

> > -Bhīşmaparva, 1352-53.

(In course of time he had two sons. Kavicandra was the elder and he was pure of mind. Rāma Sarasvatī was the younger.)

Tāne śreṣṭha putra santa Govindaka upāsanta Bhāgavata śāstre yāra rati

Veda ye purāņa gaņe nakahanta yāta vine tāna pāve kariyā bhakati.

1. Mss. with the Kamarupa Anusandhana Samiti.

172 ASPECTS OF EARLY ASSAMESE LITERATURE

Guṇavanta vamsadhara tehe kavicandra vara samandhata sodara āmara;

Yāra mahākṛpāleśe (yāra kripā anugrahe²) šiksā upadeša snehe

Ițo pada karilo pracăra.

-Udyoga parva, v. 185.

(His best son, by nature peaceful, is a worshipper of Govinda. He is devoted to the study of the holy Bhāgavata. He worships at the feet of Him that is the last word of the Vedas and the Purāṇas. Talented in the family, he is my elder, Kavicandra. It was through his favour and affectionate guidance that I have been able to propogate these verses.)

In the opening verse of the Jayadeva-kāvya, he speaks of his elder brother thus:

Jñāna cakṣu dilāhā sodara rūpa dhari Namo Kavicandrara caraņe āga vādhi:

(Assuming the form of a brother, you have given me eyes of wisdom. I come forward to bow down at the feet of Kavicandra.)

All this gives an idea of the family and parentage of Rāma Sarasvatī and the pious influence he breathed in his early life. He must have been deeply imbued with the teachings of the Bhāgavata Purāṇa and other Vaiṣṇavite Purāṇas. He must also have been widely acquainted with Sanskrit works in a variety of subjects, particularly with works on poetics, music and erotics. Later on when he joined the circle of luminaries at the court of king Nārāyaṇa, he studied cart-loads of works in manuscript placed at his disposal by the great patron of culture.

He begins his Vanaparva with a prayer to the son of Daivakī; he bows down to all true Vaiṣṇavas, to Mukundadeva, greatest among saints, and to Kṛṣṇa Dvaipāyana.³ In several places elsewhere Rāma Sarasvatī calls himself a servant of Mukunda (Mukunda-kińkara⁴).

^{2.} Mss. with Kāmarūpa Anusandhāna Samiti.

^{3.} Vanaparva, vv. 2-4.

Vanaparva, vv. 42, 1416, 1778, 3321.

It was Mukundadeva who conferred on him the titles of Bhāratacandra and Kavicandra. D. N. Bezbarua, in his Asamiyā Bhāṣā āru Sāhityar Burañjī remarks that it was Mukundadeva, son of Sukladhvaja who gave him the title of Bhāratacandra and Kavicandra⁵ Rāma Sarasvatī could not have spoken in such terms of Mukunda even though he might have been the son of his royal patron. Moreover, prince Sukladhvaja is not said to have a son, Mukunda by name. Rāma Sarasvatī, however, speaks of one Mukunda as son of Raghudeva (son of Prince Sukladhvaja). Mukundadeva undoubtedly was a spiritual preceptor of Rāma Sarasvatī, who, as was usual, invoked his blessings when beginning the Vanaparva. This is corroborated by his respectful reference to Mukundadeva as his 'own guru'.

Praṇāmo Mukunda deva mora nija guru
(I bow down to my own guru Mukundadeva.)

—Vyañjanparva, v. 88 (D.H.A.S.)

Koc King Naranārāyaṇa.—Rāma Sarasvatī's literary talents drew the attention of Naranārāyaṇa, the Koc king and his brother Sukladhvaja or Cilārāya. Śrī Śankaradeva, the great Vaisnava reformer, had already come to live and preach his faith in the Koc territory to avoid persecution in the east. He has already exerted great influence on the cultural life there. The king himself wanted to accept the discipleship of Srī Sankaradeva. The heart of Prince Sukladhvaja "was deeply stirred by Sankara's preaching of the cult of the Bhāgavata."7 Eminent scholars and poets were invited to his court to translate the Bhagavata Purana and the Mahābhārata into Assamese and also to compose treatises on varied subjects, such as grammar, poetics and astronomy,8 This was calculated to help the spread of culture and learning. Rāma Sarasvatī was asked to make verse rendering of the Mahābhārata, the seven books of the Ramayana and the eighteen Puranas for popular edification.9

The Poet's Career.—After the death of Naranārāyaṇa, he came to the capital of Raghudeva, son of Sukladhvaja, the Koc territory was partitioned during the life-time of Naranārāyaṇa, the

^{5.} p. 191.

^{6.} Udyogaparva, v. 645.

^{7.} Vanaparva, v. 3319.

K. L. Barua, Early History of Kāmarūpa, chap. XVI.
 Darrang-rāja-vamšāvalī, vv.604-612.

portion to the east of the Svarnakoşa (Sankoş) being allotted to Raghudeva. At Vijayanagara, the new capital, Raghudeva was attended by many a tributary prince. The city was as magnificent as Amarāvatī. There he used to listen to the recitation of holy books and caused them to be translated into Assamese. 11

The river Svarnakoşa, the western boundary of Raghudeva's territory has been given almost a divine origin by Rāma Sarasvatī in Baghāsura-vadha in which he describes how Arjuna by his great skill in archery drew water out of the earth for his ablution before fighting the demons.¹²

In 1583 A.D. during the reign of Raghudeva, the temple of Hayagrīva-Mādhava at Hājo was rebuilt. In Vanaparva, Rāma Sarasvati introduces the stōry of Sukarņa and his birth. Sukarņa in this narrative is said to be begotten by Hayagrīva-Mādhava and Padmarekhā for the latter's devotion to the deity. In Kulācalavadha also there is a description of the worship of Svetamādhava (Hayagrīva-Mādhava). These verses may have been written in honour of the deity, probably for recital on the occasion of the consecration of the temple and later on incorporated into the poems.

Parīkṣita succeeded his father Raghudeva. He built his capital near the Aśvakrānta hill. Rāma Sarasvatī must have moved with the king from Vijayapura, s we know that he was preceptor of Parīkṣit's brother, who was afterwards renamed by the Āhom king as Dharmanārāyaṇa on his installation as tributary rājā of Darrang. He was also the family priest of Dharmanārāyaṇa and his touching reference to the death of Raghudeva's son, his description of Balinārāyaṇa's marriage and his solicitude for the welfare of the royal family can be expected only from one intimately connected. The poet is known to have written Śāntiparva, the story of Sāvitrī in verse, during the reign of Sundaranārāyaṇa, successor of Dharmanārāyaṇa.

- 10. Darrang-rāja-vamsāvali, vv. 606-612.
- 11. Vanaparva, v. 3320.
- 12. Baghāsuravadha, p. 163.
- 13. Vanaparva, vv. 4091-4130.
- 14. Kulācalavadha, pp. 6-9.
- 15. Darrang-rāja-varisāvalī, v. 730.
- 16. Ghośā Yātrā vv. 196-197. (D.H.A.S. Ms.).
- 17. Udyogaparva, vv. 638-644; (Kāmarūpa Anusandhāna Samiti Ms.).
- 18. Śāntiparva, vv. 13-14; (Ms. No. 476, D.H.A.S.).

Rāma Sarasvatī was thus connected with four ruling kings of the Koc branch, viz., from Naranārāyaṇa to Sundaranārāyaṇa during the period from the sixties of the 16th century to the forties of the 17th.

As is well-known, King Naranārāyaņa was a great patron of culture. In order to propagate and popularise the great Indian epic, the Mahābhārata, he engaged Ramā Sarasvatī and asked him to render it into Assamese verse:

Šuniyoka ājītā mora Rāma Sarasvatī Bhāratara pada tumi kariyo samprati

-Darrang-rāja-vamśāvali, v. 606.

(Hear me, Rāma Sarasvatī, you do render into Assamese verse the Bhārata for the present.)

The Mahābhārata in Assam.—It may be recalled that before him no such organised attempt at translating the great epic was made in this part of India. The Mahābhārata story must have penetrated into Assam by the 4th century A.D.19 Sculptural representation of the Mahābhārata stories are rare.20 In some of the copper-plate land-grants occur names of Bhīma, Arjuna, Naraka, and Bhagadatta.21 It was during the reign of Durlabhanārāyana (A.D. 1330-1350)22 that we come across Assamese renderings of portions of the Mahābhārata. Harivara Vipra composed Vabruvāhanar Yuddha based on Jaimini. One of his contemporaries, Kaviratna was the author of Jayadratha-vadha. Rudra Kandali was another writer who rendered a portion of the epic into the local language. Mādhava Kandali, the fourteenth century writer of the Assamese version of the Ramayana wrote Devajit, a poem describing the defeat of Indra and other gods at the hands of Arjuna who fought with the inspiration of Krsna. The book also describes how afterwards Arjuna entered the body of Kṛṣṇa, the four Pandavas in the body of Mahadeva and Draupadi in that of Pārvatī,22a

We ought to bear in mind that the epic stories were broadcast through verbal transmission by learned scholars for good of the ^{19.} S. K. Chatterji, Kiráta-jana-kirti, p. 47.

^{20.} B. K. Barua, A Cultural History of Assam, p. 173.

^{21.} Kāmrūpa-Šāsanāvalī, pp. 99, 139, 151.

^{22.} K. L. Barua, Early History of Kamarapa, p. 250.

²²a. The authorship of Devajit is not free from doubts.-Ed.

people at large. Versions without number of the Mahābhārata were composed and recited, but nothing remains of the vast output of such oral literature. Temples of deities and courts of kings had been throughout the early ages the centres of propagation of the epics in India.²³

Patronage.—Rāma Sarasvatī had to complete a holy and tremendous task and his attainments were undoubtedly equal to it. The king gave all facilities for the work by supplying him with the entire collection of books and commentaries in his possession. In order that the poet might continue his work without worries and with comfort, the king provided him with money and placed servants at his disposal.

Naranārāyaņa's Patronage.-

Āmāka karila ājāā parama sādare Bhāratara pada tumi kariyoka sāre Āmāra grhata āche tīkā bhāsya yata Niyoka apona grhe diloho samasta Ehi buli rājā save baladhi jorāi Paṭhāilā puṣtaka save āmāsāra ṭhāi Dhana vastra alaṅkāra dilā bahutara Dāsadāsī diyā mana baḍhāilā āmāra

-Vanaparva, v. 840-841.

(With great courtesy he told me: "Please translate Bhārata into (Assamese) verse. I give you all commentaries; take them to your place". So saying the king sent me all the books on a bullock-cart. He also gave me for encouragement sufficient money, cloths, ornaments and servants.)

The king took great delight in listening to rare versions of the Mahābhārata and persons getting them for him were rewarded.²⁴ The rewards in shape of money and land which Rāma Sarasvatī received from his royal patron were sufficient for seven generations after him.²⁵

Răma Sarasvati introduced other writers like Kamsări to the king and secured for them royal permission to compose verses on ^{23.} Macdonell: A History of Sanskrit Literature. p. 288.

^{24.} Vanaparva, verse 829; Baghāsuravādha.

^{25.} Vyañjan-parva, verse 332.

the Mahābhārata stories. Rāma Sarasvatī himself composed thirty thousand verses while öther poets did only three thousand.²⁶ Elsewhere he speaks of his composing twenty-four thousand verses.²⁷

Even as a beginner, Rāma Sarasvatī's art brought him appreciation from his patrons as well as from persons of eminence. The king called him by the name Rāma Sarasvatī. Sukladhvaja gave him the title Kavicandra. Mukunda, his spiritual preceptor, called him Bhāratacandra. He was also known as Bhārata-bhuṣaṇa. Rāma Sarasvatī's name as given by his parents was Aniruddha.²³ We have already referred to the confusion regarding Ananta Kandali and Rāma Sarasvatī and there are still some who believe that they were one person and Rāma Sarasvatī had ten names. The name of the poet's elder brother also was Kavicandra; in Rāma Sarasvatī's case Kavicandra was only a title conferred upon him in recognition of his poetic ability.

Chronology of His Works.—The exact dates of composition of the different works of Rāma Sarasvatī are not at all easy to fix. In his different books, he refers, as was the custom, to his royal patrons and we have to be guided solely by this in the chronological arrangement of his poems.

Adiparva by Aniruddha Dvija (for this was the original name of Rāma Sarasvatī) must have been composed prior to his contact with the Koc court, for there are no references to the king, while in subsequent works, the pious patron is frequently praised. Vanaparva was begun in the latter part of the king's reign and the poet was yet an immature youth.²⁹ Vanaparva of Rāma Sarasvatī consists of several books—all stout volumes—and the composition of these must have been spread over several years of the politically chaotic period. In Baghāsuravadha (a part of Vanaparva) there is a clear reference to the death of Naranārāyaṇa,³⁰

Two books which form parts of Vanaparva, viz., Ghoşa-yātrā and Sindhu-yātrā were, however, completed during the reign of ^{26.} Vanaparva, verse 2367.

^{27.} Kulācalavadha (conclusion).

^{28.} Vanaparva, verses 2366-2367; 3321.

^{29.} Vanaparva, verse 1186.

^{30.} Tente Vaikunthaka päilä dharmayasa thäki gailä bakhānanta mahanta sakale. He (the King) has ascended to Vaikuntha; but he has left behind the fame of his piety and the good people all discuss about it (Baghāsuravadha).

L. 23

Dharmanārāyaṇa (A.D. 1615-1637).³¹ Virāṭaparva and Udyogaparva and Bhīṣmaparva, also were completed during the life-time of this prince.³² Jayadevakāvya (an Assamese version of the Gītagovinda) appears to be composed after the above works during the reign of the same king.³³ Sāntiparva (story of Sāvitrī) is the last contribution of his poetic career.³⁴

Karnaparva, Sindhurāparva, Vyāsāsrama and Bhīmacarita give us no indication whatever about the time they were written.

It must not be supposed, however, that Rāma Sarasvatī could complete the rendering of the entire Mahābhārata. As far as is known, he could write the võluminous Vanaparva and a few more of the other parvas, viz., Ādiparva, Virāṭaparva, Udyogaparva, Bhīṣmaparva and Karṇaparva. In the body of these books also we find portions contributed by other writers such as Kaṁsāri. Gopīnātha Pāṭhaka, son of Rāma Sarasvatī, also rendered some books into verse and his work is not unworthy of a son of the eminent father.

As a Translator.—The other books besides Vanaparva are mostly paraphrases of the original. Matters not strictly necessary for keeping up the main story are very often eliminated and hence we find only about one fourth of the original matter in the Assamese versions. Rāma Sarasvatī is true to the original and in almost all books retains the flavour of the original.

Dharmamaya bṛkṣa yudhiṣṭhira mahābala | Nakula Sahadeva tāte bhailā phulaphala || Mañi dṛḍha siphā mūle bhedichō pātāla Bhīma Dhanañjaya dui bhāi bhailā ḍāla

-Udyogaparva, v. 79-80.

(Yudisthira is a mighty tree of virtue and righteousness. Nakula and Sahadeva are the flowers and the fruits thereon. I am the root passing down to Pātāla and keeping the tree fixed. Bhīma and Dhananjaya are the branches.)

Ghogāyātrā, verse 198, Ms. No. 467, D.H.A.S.; Sindhuyātrā, verses 1021, 1091 (edition of Nandeswar Chakravarti, 1927).

Udyogaparva, verse 648 verses 638-449, Kāmarūpa Anusandhāna Samiti.
 Bhīsmaparva, verse 1361, Ms. Kāmarūpa Anusandhāna Samiti.

^{33.} Jayadeva-kāvya.

^{34.} Santiparva, Ms. No. 476, D.H.A.S.

Nate bhāţe vedhi vedhi kare nānā stuti Eteke prakāre yāra nidrā bimukuti Āve ghane ghane ghora śṛgālara rāve Simha bāghe bedhi bedhi tomāka jagāwe

-Udyogaparva, 363-64.

(Formerly he used to be roused from sleep by the praises sung by the nata and bhāta. Now the jackals, lions and tigers that rove round rouse you up by their repeated unseemly noise.)

The Gītā portion of Bhīṣmaparva is only about forty verses. Here is an instance of brevity without the sacrifice of the main argument of the book. This may be said of all the books of the original Mahābhārata that he has translated.

Rāma Sarasvatī's Uniqueness.-Rāma Sarasvatī's claim to consideration as a narrative poet does not rest on his translation work. He has earned fame and popularity by his Vanaparva which is a book-rather a collection of books-quite distinct from the Vanaparva in the Mahābhārata. The life of the Pāndavas in exile, as depicted in the Mahābhārata cannot be called eventful. It is a life of quiet discourse with sages in the forest. But in Vanaparva of Rāma Sarasvatī, the Pāndavas have to undergo numerous difficulties, experience untold hardship and go in for thrilling adventures. Because of their great devotion, Lord Kṛṣṇa on all occasions, comes to their rescue. The Pandavas are made instrumental in the annihilation of the enemies of peace and virtue. They fulfil this divine mission in a manner quite worthy of true 'warriors' who are also Vaisnavas. An analysis of the Vanaparva of Rāma Sarasvatī, which is a collection of several long narratives, can alone give an idea of the unique character of this book.

Different Books of Vanaparva.—In the exordium to the Vanaparva Rāma Sarasvatī gives an idea of the different stories of adventures of the Pāṇḍavas that are incorporated into the Vanaparva of his creation. Only a few incidents of the original epic are retained by Rāma Sarasvatī and no trace whatever is found of the stories that he introduces from sources which yet are unknown. Almost all the narratives that Rāma Sarasvatī mentions are now available. Some of these, as already stated, have been printed while others are deposited in collections of D.H.A.S. and Kāmarūpa Anusandhāna Samiti. They include Puṣpaharaṇa, Vijayaparva, Maṇicandra Ghoṣa, Kālakuñjavadha, Bhojakutavadha, Jaṅghāsuravadha, Sindhuyātrā, Kamalaparva, Pātālaparva (Aśvakarṇavadha) and Ghoṣayātrā. In Baghāsuravadha, the poet refers to Kālajaṅghavadha Pakṣimokṣa (release of the bird: Bihaṅgamavadha), Khaṭāsuravadha, and Dhūmrākṣavadha (Kulācalavadha) and these are also available, some of them are even in print. Some of the narratives, such as Kālavikālavadha, Vṛhddattavadha, Himaśravavadha are yet to be found out. This list is quite sufficient to give us an idea of the massive character of the Vanaparva and when Rāma Sarasvatī wrote that he composed thirty thousand verses, it was no exaggeration. Each of these poems is an independent book by itself and although all these are included in one parva they are rarely found together in one collection.

Analysis of the Contents of Vanaparva: Puspaharana.—Once when the Pāṇḍavas were wandering in exile, they had to pass through a mustard field and Bhīma destroyed the mustard flowers without knowing it. Yudhiṣṭhira advised him to serve the owner of the field to compensate the loss thus incurred. The owner happened to be Kālu Brāhmaṇa, who employed him in paddy cultivation. Bhīma worked miracles and he was soon found out to be one of the Pāṇḍavas in exile. This aspect of Bhīma's character is developed in Rāma Sarasvati's well-known narrative, Bhīmacarita, Maṇicandra-ghoṣa.—On another occasion while the five brothers along with Draupadī were passing through Bhavārṇava forest, they had to take shelter near a certain lake one day. All except Bhīma were bitten by a serpent called Puṇḍarīka, and fell down unconscious. Bhīma was told that the dead persons could be revived at the touch of a certain jewel in possession of the king of the serpents inhabiting the nether region. Bhīma's adventures into the serpent kingdom is a thrilling tale. Bhīma gets the maṇi and a wife and returns to bring his brothers and Draupadī back to life. Rāma Sarasvatī may have caught some portion of Manasā story and used it for his purpose just as Vaiṣṇavite stories have been woven into the Manasā Kāvyas.

Vijayaparva.—Rāma Sarasvatī incidentally describes how the craving for conquest in Dhṛtarāṣṭra was satisfied when through the grace of Āditya (the sun-god) he regained his eye-sight for a period of three months. In this expedition Tṛśirā, a great demon was vanquished by Vidura who is traditionally known to be a peaceful devotee of Vişnu.

Kālakuñjavadha.—Kālakuñja, a king of the Mlecchas, killed the five brothers and Draupadī fought against an army of his followers. The Mlecchas were defeated by her and the Pāṇḍavas, through the grace of Indra, were revived.

Baghāsuravadha.—Draupadī worshipped Gaurī who granted her a boon that she would not be a widow. Pāṇḍavas were asked by the sage Agasti to quell a demon called Baghāsura who was born of a hermit father and demon mother. Pāṇḍavas who were always eager to destroy the forces of evil consented and Draupadī was presented with a necklace that could even restore life to the dead. The demon with the head of a tiger became invincible because of a boon he had received from Mahādeva and Caṇḍī and defied all the world.

In the fierce fight that followed all Păndavas except Yudhişthira was killed, but they were brought back to life at the touch of the necklace. Baghāsura at last met his end at the hands of Bhīma.

Mahişadānavavadhā or Bhojakutavadha.—Mahişadānava was in shape a buffalo, a demon born of a Brāhmaṇa father and a shebuffalo. After three days of fight Arjuna killed the demon and brought out Bhīma who had been swallowed up, from his entrails.

Bihangama-mokşa.—A gandharva who was guilty of indecorum at a musical performance before the gods was cursed to be a huge bird and the curse was to be lifted when Pāṇḍavas in the course of their exile would kill him. The bird caught hold of Draupadī and covered her under the wings and Arjuna by killing the bird rescued her.

Khaṭāsuravadha.—Khaṭāsura, a hideous demon, proposed to Draupadī when alone in the cottage that she should abandon the beggar husbands and marry him. At her sternness of attitude the demon pulled down the cottage and was about to drag her. All the Pāṇḍavas who resisted fell at his hands and Draupadī prayed to Kṛṣṇa for help at such an hour of distress. Kṛṣṇa appeared to her and advised her to strike the demon with her bracelets. The demon was accordingly killed by Draupadī.

Aśvakarṇavadha.—One day while Bhīma and Arjuna were looking for water in a well, they saw a beautiful maiden beneath. She entreated them for a lift above. Bhīma had some misgivings about her intention, but at last, out of chivalry they decided to rescue her. Bhīma held out one end of a bow, but he was dragged down. Arjuna in order to help him out caught his brother, but both the brothers were taken to Pātāla. There she related her story. She was the daughter of King Ūśīnara, a favourite of Siva and Durgā who granted her eternal beauty. Aśvakarṇa, a powerful demon vanquished her father. Hemā, for that was the name of the maiden, knew that Aśvakarṇa was destined to be quelled by Naranārāyaṇa. Aśvakarṇa met his end and Arjuna, at Mahādeva's behest, married Hemā.

Janghāsuravadha.—On another occasion Bhīma was taken captive by Janghāsura, a great devotee of Siva. Bhīma prayed to Kṛṣṇa who sent Garuḍa for his release. The Asura was at last discomfited.

Kulācalavadha.—In the course of their wanderings in exile, the Pāṇḍavas came to the hermitage of a sage who extended to them a hearty welcome, but warned them against their entry into the territory of Dhūmrākṣa or Kulācala, a demon king who was a menace and terror to all peace-loving sages and saints. Son of a Vaiṣṇava king, Dhūmrākṣa grew up to be an oppressor of man, specially of the Vaiṣṇavas. On one occasion he came to a great sacrifice performed by ṛṣis and devoured all food articles set apart to be offered to the deities. The sage in charge of the sacrifice turned him into a demon with the head of a goat. The father of Dhūmrākṣa who came to punish the sages was turned with all retinue into rocks. The curse was to be lifted when Viṣṇu in his avatāra as Kṛṣṇa would place his feet on the rocks. His infamous son was assigned a territory and he would be killed only with a dhūpa-stand, when outside the limit of his kingdom.

One day the Pāṇḍavas were attacked by the hideous-looking followers of Kulācala who were looking for soft human flesh for their master's meal. Bhīma killed them all. When this was reported to Kulācala he came with a huge army and challenged the Pāṇḍavas who, except Yudhiṣṭhira, were all killed by the invincible monster. Śrī Kṛṣṇa, in response to the prayer of Yudhiṣṭira, came and brought all the dead back to life. Meanwhile Kulācala faced Kṛṣṇa in order to be killed and be relieved of his earthly existence. The demon was not to be killed until he was touched with a dhūpa-stand. He fell and instantly ascended to Vaikuṇṭha. At touch of Kṛṣṇa's feet his father with all followers who had been petrified now regained their human form.

Sindhu-yātrā.—The Pāndava brothers were dwelling in huts near Dharmaksetra where Sindhurā was performing a sacrifice. Navagraha and Visnu were worshipped. Gifts were made to the needy and thereof was great rejoicing for days together. Some of the king's elephants destroyed the trees around the huts in which Pandavas were putting up. This led to a fight in which many of the valiant followers of Sindhura, including his brother were killed. While Arjuna was engaged in fighting a follower of Sindhurā elsewhere, the infuriated king routed the four Pandayas who all fell dead. Arjuna killed a host of fighters including the invincible Kālaketu - the greatest of the king's generals; then followed a fight between Arjuna and Sindhura - the last and the most severe. After the armoury on both sides was exhausted, they began a duel lasting for eleven days. The gods came down and intervened and the adversaries were pacified and reconciled. They did not know that they were brothers, for Sindhura was begotten by Candra and Kunti while the latter was yet a virgin. The timid and tiny mother put the child in a casket and set it floating on the sea till it was discovered by the childless king Suravinda who adopted the boy as heir to the throne.

Unity of the Vadhakāvyas.—In almost all these narratives, the theme is the death and destruction of demons representing all that is evil. The Pāṇḍavas and Draupadī suffer temporary defeat and disaster, but are ultimately rescued because of their unshaken faith in and devotion to Śrī Kṛṣṇa. The Pāṇḍavas are fulfilling a divine mission, namely, the suppression of tyranny and wrong. The exile of the Pāṇḍavas allegorically represents trials and difficulties of the world and divine grace is the only thing that gives strength and courage. It may be represented as also a symbol of the eternal conflict between the good and the evil. Dr. Kakati³6 has aptly suggested comparison of these narrative poems of Rāma Sarasvatī with the mediaeval romances on the one hand and with ancient Greek legends such as those of Hercules and Perseus on the other.

The Mahābhārata has a Vaiṣṇavite bias and Winternitz even thinks that epic poetry seems to have been cultivated more in those regions of India where Viṣṇu was the predominent deity. Viṣṇu figures prominently in the epic. It has been therefore known also as 'Kṛṣṇa Veda'. It is no wonder therefore, that Rāma Sarasvatī writing under the inspiration of neo-Vaiṣṇavism expresses the glory of Kṛṣṇa through his narratives of romance, adventure and battle. The Vaisnavite stamp is really unmistakable in all the Kāvyas of Rāma Sarasvatī. He frequently refers to the different books of Vanaparva as Vaisnavaparva.37 The heroes and the heroine are painted as true Vaisnava warriors. The story of the Bhāgavata-Purāna is referred to frequently in the narratives. The demons are the prototypes of Vrtra and Hiranyakasipu. There are verses scattered everywhere that are mere paraphrases of some of the ślokas of the Bhagavata Purana; to cite only a few: -

> Henato iśvara Krsnadeva Sanātana Satrubhāve mukta hove kariyā śravana Premabhāva smaraņara ki kaibo mahattva38

> > Kulācalavadha, p. 404.

Dekhā kena Hari bhakatira mahattvaka Yemane temane mātra smaroka Krsnaka Vairabhave bhaya mane yemane temane Prema bhajanir sīmā kahibeka kone 39

Kulācalavadha, p. 362.

(Such is the Kṛṣṇa, the lord eternal, One's soul is liberated even if he remembers Him as an enemy. What should I speak of the merit if He is remembered in love.

Behold the power of a devotee of Hari. Kṛṣṇa is remembered with hostility or with fear or in any other way. who can describe the love-way of devotion to him?)

> Kuksita thākante šisu peţe ghāle pāve Tāhāra dosaka tabho nadharanta māve40

> > Kulācalavadha, p. 312.

(The child in the womb strikes the mother with its feet and the mother takes no note of this behaviour.)

vana bhayanaka Durghora rajanî Preta-piśacara sthāna

^{37.} Vanaparva-Adi, verse 204; Baghāsuravadha.

^{38.} Bhagavata Purana, VII., 1. 29.

^{39.} Ibid., X. 29. 15.

^{40.} Bhagavata Purana, X. 10. 14.

Patiputrasave

vicāri phuraya

Pālaţi karā sanmāna 41

Baghāsuravadha, v. 966.

(The night is terrible and this forest is the abode of fierce demons and ghosts. Do go back; for your husbands and children are all in search of you.)

These popular narratives were not meant to be a direct propaganda of the Bhāgavata cult. But all the same they unconsciously helped to consolidate and strengthen the influence of Vaiṣṇavism in the eastern part of India. A bad story, as some one has said, has a moral; but a good one is a moral.

Naranārāyaṇa.—Another thing which strikes one in almost all these Kāvyas is the recognition of Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna as Nārāyaṇa and Nara.

> Devakīra garbha vyakta haibā nārāyana Kuntīra thalata nararūpe utapana

> > Baghāsuravadha.

(Nārāyaṇa will be born as son of Devakī and Nara as that of Kuntī.)

Devakīra garbhe nārāyaņa avatāra Kuntīra garbhata āsi narara vihāra

Vanaparva, first part.

(Nara and Nărāyaṇa are born în Devaki and Kunti respectively.)

> Yaduvamse vasudeva tāhāna gṛhata Daivakīra garbhe nārāyaṇara vekata; Pāṇḍuvamse mahādevī kuntīra thalata Nare āsi dhananjaya bhailanta vekata

> > -Sindhuyātrā, verses 36, 1136.

(Nārāyaṇa has manifested himself in the family of Vasudeva in the Yadu clan as son of Daivakī; Nara as Dhanañjaya as son of queen Kunti in Pāṇḍu's family.)

This idea recurs in almost all Rāma Sarasvatī's Kāvyas. We know of sculptural representations of the Naranārāyaṇa story originally appearing in the Mahābhārata and subsequently in the Devībhāgavata and in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa. Here in this part of India, this tradition seems to be preserved in the Kāvyas of Rāma Sarasvatī.

Śańkaradeva and Rāma Sarasvatī.—As a junior contemporary of Śrī Śańkaradeva, Rāma Sarasvatī came under the influence of the great reformer-poet. The age was practically the age of one book and that was the Bhāgavata Purāṇa and Śrī Śańkaradeva as well as Rāma Saraswatī were both drunk deep in the 'divine nectar' of the great Purāṇa of the Vaiṣṇavas. The writing of Rāma Sarasvatī bear evidence of Śrī Śańkaradeva's influence in several ways, specially in some of the descriptive passages. The hymns and homilies that characterise the Vaiṣṇavite narratives are also to be met with Rāma Sarasvatī. Invocation to goddess Sarasvatī and Vedavyāsa are retained by Rāma Sarasvatī in conformity with the traditional way of beginning a Mahābhārata story. Rāma Sarasvatī is a Vaiṣṇavite writer and refers in glowing terms to the great elder Vaiṣṇavite of his time.

The Origin.—Although the Vaiṣṇavite spirit permeates the narratives of Rāma Sarasvatī, the materials woven into his Vanaparva are drawn from sources yet unknown. Here are described the combats and adventures of the Pāṇḍavas while in exile but excepting a few, they are not in the Mahābhārata story. The exile of the Pāṇḍavas involving adventures gives the poet an opportunity to incorporate matters into his poem of which no shadow is found in the Mahābhārata. Rāma Sarasvatī claims to have received his materials from different Purāṇas, Yāmalasamhitā, Hamsakāki, Sivarahasya and other works. Rāma Sarasvatī says that he has borrowed materials handed down from Mārkaṇḍeya:

Maharşi Märkandeye kahichā pūrvata Paramadharmajña cāri pakṣīra āgata :
—Baghāsuravadha.

(The great sage Mārkaṇḍeya has revealed this to the four birds of great wisdom.)

> Dvaipāyana muni Mārkaņdeyata kahilā Mārkaņdeya muni dharmapakṣīka paḍhāilā Dharmapakṣīgaṇeye Jaiminika kahilā > > -Kulācalavadha.

(The sage Dvaipāyana related this to Mārkaņdeya; Mārkaņdeya taught it to Dharmapakṣīs and they in their turn transmitted it to Jaimini.)

Dharmaye pakṣīta Mārkaṇḍeya muni kahiyā āche bujāi —Vanaparva-Ādi.

(Mārkaņdeya has explained all to Dharmapakṣi.)

The four birds and Markandeya clearly point to Markandeya Purāna, but this Purāna, as we find it now, contains a few very brief answers to questions relating to the great epic. Hamsakāki still remains a mystery. Sivarahasya is said to be a part of Sainkarasamhita belonging to Skanda Purāna, What has been remarked by Winternitz about Skanda Purāna is noticeable in this connection: "The ancient Purana of this name (Skanda), however, is probably entirely lost; for though there is a considerable number of more or less extensive works claiming to be Samhitas and Khandas of the Skanda Purāna and an almost overwhelming mass of Māhātmyas which give themselves out as portions of this Purăna, only one, very ancient, manuscript contains a text which calls itself simply 'Skanda Purāna'. Even this text, however, is scarcely identical with the ancient Purana." 43 Most probably a great mass of Puranas and other literature must have been lost in course of time, and except portions of them here and there, nothing is left of them. Even if the great bulk of literature spoken of by Rāma Sarasvatī, is an exaggeration, there undoubtedly existed a great variety of literature in Pragiyotisa area, and various factors combined to destroy these ancient records.

Rāma Sarasvatī is also credited with the authorship of Vyāsāśrama, a long narrative poem describing the career of Bhīṣma, Sir Galahad of Indian epic. His conflict with Puraśurāma, and the latter's defeat is held up as a victory of a true Vaiṣṇava warrior over pride and haughtiness which Paraśurāma represents. The story is interspersed with theological matters drawn probably from different Purāṇas. This also gives an account of Brāhmaṇas and Vaiṣṇavas who have fallen from their high ideals of life and yielded to earthly temptations.

The Jayadevakāvya, an Assamese version of Jayadeva's Gītagovinda was composed towards the end of Rāma Sarasvati's poetic ^{43.} Winternitz, Indian Literature, p. 570.

rhetoric

career. The book is more than a translation of the original. While it is not possible to restore in a translation the music and aroma of Jayadeva, Rāma Sarasvatī has modified the spirit of the original by introduction of some elements of the Bhāgavata Purāṇa. He has also put into his version matters relating to Indian music and

By far the most widely known and popular of Rāma Sarasvati's work is Bhīmacarita. Here is, an episode of Bhīma's early life as found in the Mahābhārata (Ādiparva), the end of Bakāsura, a great tyrant. But tagged to this is Bhīma's career as a servant in the household of Siva, who with his consort Pārvatī and two little sons leads a life of poverty and want. Bhīma's gluttony, Siva's lack of knowledge of worldly affairs, the helplessness of gods and sages — all these add an element of humour into this piece of work and combined with its vivid picture of poor peasant life, the book has made an appeal that no other book has ever done among the rural population. It is curious to find in the Sivāyana of Rāmeśvara, an eighteenth century Bengali poet writing of Siva.44

This was Rāma Sarasvatī who has provided entertainment and edification for about four centuries by telling people, in language not beyond the reach of the common man, of joys and sorrows, overthrow and victory, hope and courage and above all a faith that sustains. His verse comes to bosom and business of men and is therefore, welcome even to-day. Rāma Sarasvatī cannot possibly claim a place along with Śri Śańkaradeva and Mādhavadeva, but surely he comes next to them.

ORIGIN OF THE ASSAMESE DRAMA

BY

KALIRAM MEDHI

The Assamese drama came into existence during the sixteenth century A.D. It was religious in its origin. Also it was almost entirely a native growth and although its framework was borrowed from the classical Sanskrit drama, its integral parts were made up entirely of indigenous materials. Influence of Sanskrit drama is indeed great. It is also possible, though hardly probable, that the Sanskrit-Prakrit-Maithili drama of Umāpati exercised some indirect influence on minor points. But the ultimate source of the Assamese drama, divested of the outward form, is in all probability the choral performance of the Assamese Ojā-pāli. Śańkaradeva appears to have improved this kind of performance and to have given birth to the Assamese drama.

The origin of the Indian drama is also similar. "The rise of the drama is thus most probably due to the coalescence of recited epic legend with ancient pantominic art. But we know nothing of the history of the actual drama till we come across it, fully developed, about 200 A.D. It probably arose in the land of Surasenas, at Mathurā, their capital."

The Ojā-pāli of Assam is a party of chorus singers and dancers. Only a mute actor, the Devadhani, was later introduced in the Suknānnī performance. The Ojā-pāli not only sing in chorus and dance with the music of khutitāla, but also explain the action by speech, gestures and body movements. And if the dialogue of the characters could be supplied the drama would be complete. This, in all probability, Śrīmanta Śańkaradeva effected by introducing actors. The Sutradhara of Assamese drama took the place of the Ojā and the Gāyan-bāyan replaced his pālis. They form the chorus and remain on the stage throughout the whole performance. The Sutradhara, like the leader of the Greek chorus, advises, directs and controls the whole performance. Thus he plays the role of the stage-manager of the Indian drama for the prologue and of the Greek chorus during the actual performance. It should not, however, be forgotten that Sankaradeva took the framework of his plays from the Sanskrit drama and used the ancient pantomimic art of Assam to complete his work. Assamese drama is a native growth and probably the first in India in point of time. Sankaradeva gave birth to a regular vernacular drama and introduced vernacular prose first in India.

Points of resemblance with the Sanskrit drama.—The following points may be considered:

- (1) Anka (dramatic work).—there are in Sanskrit, ten types of dramas (Rūpaka), viz. Nātaka, Prakarana, Dima, Īhāmrga, Vīthī. Samavakāra, Prahasana, Vyāyoga, Bhāna and Anka (or Utsṛṣṭikanka). The general name for the Assamese drama is Anka. This term appears specially in the caritras (biographies) and is used by theatrical parties to designate a dramatic work. This term has evidently been borrowed from the type of Sanskrit drama known as Anka. Only in one particular however, the Assamese Anka answers to Sanskrit theory, viz., that it is an one-act play. In all other respects the Assamese Anka differs from the Anka type of the Sanskrit drama, of which the subject-matter is imaginary, sentiment pathetic, the hero an ordinary person and the juncture, style and sub-divisions are like those of a Bhana. The special characteristics of a Sanskrit Anka are lamentations of women and battle by speech. An Assamese Anka corresponds generally to a Nataka which is the principal type of the Sanskrit drama and which comprises all the sentiments (bhava) only with this main difference that unlike the Sanskrit Nataka, which contains 5 to 10 acts, it has only one. The poet Bhasa also wrote several one-act plays in Sanskrit which were, however, Vyāyogas and not Ańkas.
- (2) Pūrva-ranga (Preliminaries).—The Sanskrit dramatic theory requires a series of preliminaries which must be performed before the actual drama begins. This was intended originally to obviate the impediments to a successful performance. Such preliminaries also form part of the Assamese performance.
- (3) Nāndī (Benediction).—The real prologue in a Sanskrit drama begins with a Nāndī. The opening verse recited in praise of a deity, a Brāhmaṇa or a king is a Nāndī.¹ Some say this forms part of the preliminaries (Pūrva-ranga) and others that the prologue (āsthāpanā or prastāvanā) begins with it. But it is seen that most Sanskrit plays open with a Nāndī verse, followed by the remark—Ašīrvacanasamyuktā stutīryasmāt prayujyate Devadvijanīpādinām tasmānnāndīti samjnītā.—Sāhitya-darpaņa, VI, 24.

"At the close of Nandi the Sutradhara (enters)." Some authorities, however, maintain that the Stage-manager (Sūtradhāra) recites the Nandi verse. This is exactly the case with the Assamese plays. In the Assamese drama there are usually two Nandi verses in Sanskrit, one in praise of Kṛṣṇa or Rāma and the other hinting at the plot, followed by the remark—nāndyante sūtradhāraḥ. But in point of fact the Sūtradhāra himself recites these verses.

- (4) Prarocanā (Laudation or propitiation).—This in Sans-krit drama gives the contents of the play and arouses expectation by means of its praise.² It also appeals to the benevolence of the audience. This practice is also followed in the Assamese drama, the prarocanā of which consists of a Sanskrit verse, beginning with Bho bhoḥ sāmājikāḥ followed by the Bhaṭimā.
- (5) Āmukha (Introduction) and Prastāvanā (Induction).—
 The principal feature of an introduction in the Sanskrit drama is a dialogue led by the stage-manager with an attendant (pāripār-śvika) or an actress (naṭī) or the Jester (vidūṣaka) indirectly hinting as to who is coming into the stage. Bharata calls this trigata, because it means the guesses as to the cause of the sound, as of the hum of bees, the melody of the cuckoo, or of celestial music. This practice is closely followed in the Assamese play wherein a sound in the space causes the stage-manager to turn his ear to the sky and to ask his companion (saṅgī sakhi) to ascertain what the sound is about. Thereupon the companion exclaims: "It is the music of the celestial kettle-drum" (devadundubhi vājata). Then the director announces that he (Gopāla, Rāma, or some other hero as the case may be) is coming on the stage. After this the real play begins.
- (6) Śloka (Sanskrit verse).—There is in Sanskrit drama interchange of lyrical stanzas with prose dialogue. This is also the case with Assamese plays. Sanskrit plays are full of lyrical passages describing scenes or persons presented to view. These lyrical passages are composed in a great many different metres. Assamese plays also follow this. The frame-work of Śańkaradeva's plays (with one exception) is also in Sanskrit ślokas. The ślokas themselves form the skeleton of the plot and, even if the songs, dialogue, poetry and the stage-manager's directions are expunged, the germ (vija) of the plot (vastu) will be quite apparent from them. They supply the elements (vindu) of the plot for expansion and spread out in the whole play like a drop of oil in water. A glance at the Sanskrit ślokas in Keli-Gopāla, for instance, will make this clear.

Šrīmanta Šankaradeva himself composed for his six extant plays 179 Sanskrit verses out of a total of 180 and quoted only one verse in Patnī-prasāda from the Bhāgavata Purāna. The metres used are many, including anuṣṭubh, upendra-vajrā, upajāti, puṣpitāgrā, bhujanga-prayāta, vasanta-tilaka, mālinī, and śārdūla-vikrīdita. Mādhava Deva employs indravajrā, mandākrāntā, śārdūla-vikrīdita, bhujanga-prayāta, āryā and āryā-gīti in his plays.

- (7) Sandhi (Juncture) .- There are five stages (Avasthā) of the dramatic action. (Kārya), viz. beginning (Ārambha), effort (Prayatna), prospect of success (Praptyasa), certainty of success (Niyatāpti) and attainment of the result (Phalāgama). The ultimate aim of a plot (Artha-prakṛti) is the attainment of the result (phalāgama). There are five elements of the plot parallel to the five stages of the action. They are called junctures (Sandhi); they are: the opening (Mukha), the progression (Pratimukha), the development (Garbha), the drop (Vimarşa) and the conclu-(Nirvahana). These junctures connect one stage with another."3 The Assamese plays, though all in one act, also reveal these five junctures of the plot. For instance, in Rama-Vijaya, the arrival of Viśvāmitra at Daśaratha's court in Ayodhyā and taking of Rama and Laksmana to his hermitage for guarding the sacrifice form the opening (Mukha), the arrival of Rāma at Janaka's place for the Svayamvara of Sītā, the progression (Pratimukha). the breaking of the bow of Siva and winning the hand of Sītā by Rāma, the development (Garbha), the battle of Rāma with assembled princes at Mithila and the scene with Parasurama on the way home, the pause (Vimarsa) and the reception of Rama and Sītā at home,—the conclusion (Nirvahanā).
- (8) Rasa (sentiment).—It was the aim of Sankaradeva to rouse religious feelings in the spectators and in effecting this his drama excited various sentiments which are regarded as the principal features of the Sanskrit drama. Thus Sankaradeva rouses principally the terrible (Bhayānaka) and pathetic (Karuṇa) sentiments in his Kāli-damana, the erotic (Śrngāra) in Keli-Gopāla, the marvellous (Adbhuta) in Patnī-prasāda, the erotic and heroic

- (Vira) in Rukmini-harana and Rāma-vijaya and the heroic and odious (vibhatsa) sentiments in the Pārijāta-harana. Similarly in Mādhavadeva's plays the comic (Hāsya), pathetic and marvellous sentiments are moderate. It should be remembered that Sankaradeva's theme was young and Mādhavadeva's child Kṛṣṇa. Sankaradeva was a married person and of strong personality. So, he could excel in portraying the exploits of young Kṛṣṇa (or Rāma). On the other hand Mādhavadeva was a celibate and ascetic and of a serious and philosophic turn of mind. He had no experience of conjugal life. So, he never attempted to excite the erotic sentiment. But he was a master in the art of drawing fascinating pictures of child Kṛṣṇa with all mischievous propensities and comic elements in his plays.
- (9) The Prose.—An important feature of Sanskrit drama is the mixture of prose and verse. The dialogue is, almost always, in prose. The prose portion of a play is generally prosaic and serves only to introduce the lofty sentiment of the verse that follows. This is exactly the case with Assamese drama in which the dialogue of actors and direction of the stage-manager, which are in prose, are mixed up with the elegant style and high sentiment of the following song or Bhaţimā. Here also the prose is very common-place.
- (10) Mukti-mangala (concluding benediction).—In the epilogue of Sanskrit plays some such question as this asked—"Is there anything further that you desire?" The hero replies to this uttering a benediction called Bharata-vākya. In Assamese drama also such a benediction known as "Mukti-mangala" appears. This is generally a Bhatimā in Capaya metre and recited not only by the hero alone but also by the stage-manager, the chorus and the actors.
- (11) Unity of time and place.—As in the Sanskrit drama there is no unity of time or place in the Assamese plays.

Points of difference between Anka and Sanskrit Drama .-

(1) The language.—According to the Indian tradition as given in the Nāṭya-śāśtra of Bharata, drama is of divine origin, and designed and fashioned by Bharata himself. It was transerred by sage Bharata to this earth as the fifth Veda, which, unlike the other four, would not be the jealous preserve of the three twice-born castes, but might be shared by the Sudras also.⁴ But in point of fact, although dramatic entertainments were thrown open to the common people as well, the language in which the plays were enacted was much too refined and developed for their appreciation and was fitted only for the demands of the cultured few, the major portion of each play is written in Sanskrit which ceased to be the language of the people by the time Aśoka (300 B.C.) but which nevertheless survived as the classical and learned form of speech. The play of Aśvaghosa, the earliest Sanskrit dramatist, could not have been written before the second century B.C. and those of Bhāsa and Kālidāsa before 350 and 400 A.D. respectively. In accordance with dramatic theory Sanskrit is spoken by the principal personages of the play, by devotees and female ascetics, by the chief queen, by daughters of ministers and by courtesans, while the other females and inferior characters use several varieties of Prakrits.5 In the circumstances it was impossible for the general audience to fully understand the whole play, much less to appreciate the artistic subtlety, the philosophic background, the moral purpose, and the poetic beauty into which the highly refined and cultured intellects were capable of entering. It has been rightly remarked that the Indian drama is a Brahmanical production aiming not at delineation but at the awakening of sentiments and making its appeal to the cultured minority. The elevated disregard of popularity accounts for much that is characteristic of the higher class of Indian plays.6

^{4.} Nātya-šāstra, chap. I; Keith, Sanskrit Drama, p. 12.

L. 25

On the other hand Assamese drama appeals to the common people with the object of exciting religious emotion and sentiment. It represents principally the Kṛṣṇa legends in order that the audience might appreciate, with aesthetic enjoyment, the importance and excellence of the Kṛṣṇa cult. And to make the performance intelligible even to the illiterate people and women a simple language has been adopted. This is Brajabuli (Brajāvalibhāṣā in Assamese) the common language of the Kṛṣṇa cult of northern and eastern India. Brajabuli is supposed to have been the sacred language of the Kṛṣṇa devotion (just as Pāli was of Buddhism) and to have connection with the language of the classical Sanskrit drama. "The normal prose language of Sanskrit drama is Sauraṣenī Prākrit and we can only suppose that it is so because it was the ordinary speech of the people among whom the drama first developed into definite shape. Once this was established we may feel assured, the usage would be continued wherever the drama spread; we have modern evidence of the persistence of the Brajabhāṣā, the language of the revival of the Kṛṣṇa cult, after the Muhammedan invasion, in the ancient home of Ṣaurasenī, as the language of Kṛṣṇa devotion beyond the limits of its natural home."

^{5.} D.R., II. 64-65; N.S., XVI, 33-43.

^{6.} New Ency. Brit., Vol. VIII, pp. 576-78.

Thus, two poets of Mithilä, Yaśorāja Khān of Gauda, Rāmānanda Rāya of Orissa and Śrīmanta Śankaradeva and Mādhavadeva of Assam composed their immortal songs in this language in which Maithili elements preponderate. There were also local variations. Thus the Bargitas composed by Sankaradeva and Mādhavadeva have a distinct Kāmarūpī ring. It is admitted that Brajabuli is not a spoken dialect of any place but an artificial literary language used by Vaisnavites principally in songs. Dr. Sukumar Sen opines that, "This artificial language was given the name of Brajabuli because it reminded one of Vraja, the land sanctified by the presence of Radha and Krsna. The term of Brajabuli, however, should not be confused with the name of Brajabhākhā or Brajabhāṣā. The latter is the name of the actual spoken language, a form of western Hindi of the district round about Muttra."8 But the truth appears to be that Brajabuli must have been based on some spoken dialect, for no artificial language is known to have been created out of nothing. The Vedic language, supposed by some to have been an artificial and highly developed language, is based on a spoken dialect. The Gatha language of the Buddhists is based on Sanskrit: Pali, an artificial literary language is based on a local dialect. Prakrits are not so much varieties of speech of the people as of the grammarians. But they are all based on local dialects. So is the case with the Brajabuli. There are grounds for supposing that it is based on the old dialect of Mathura in which Mīrābāi later wrote her commentary on the Gita-govinda, Sūdrās composed his Sura-Sāgara and Swami Haridās his Śādhāran Siddhanta.

Śańkaradeva and his followers used Brajabuli not only in their songs but also in their plays. It should not, however, be supposed that they used this language in all their religious works. They composed their lyrics and prayer books, like the songs and lyrics of pre-Vaiṣṇava authors, in the classical Kāmarūpī language. We may accordingly conclude that Śańkaradeva used Brajabuli in his Bargītas because it was the common language of Kṛṣṇa devotion and in his drama because it was supposed to have been the language of the place (Vraja) where Śaurasenī, the usual Prākrit of Sanskrit drama, was spoken.

^{7.} Keith, Sanskrit Drama, pp. 40-41.

^{3.} A History of Brajabuli literature, p. 3.

- (2) Dramatic propriety.—As the Assamese drama was meant for the eyes and ears of the common people the traditional rules of decorum and propriety of the Sanskrit drama were violated in order to satisfy the taste of the audience. Thus, though the dramatic theory⁹ prohibits representation of such incidents as battle, killing, marriage, amorous dalliance, bathing, anointing the body, putting on garments, eating and the like, they are freely shown on the stage. We see battle scenes in Pārijāta-haraṇa, Rukmiṇi-haraṇa and Rāma-vijaya, killing in Pārijāta-haraṇa, Keli-Gopāla and Kamsa-vadha and eating in Patnī-prasāda, Bhūmī-luṭiwā and Bhojana-Vihāra. Tragedy is unknown in the Sanskrit drama. But there are a few specimens of tragedy in Assamese drama, e.g., Kamsa-vadha, Jarāsandha-Vadha.
- (3) Sütradhära (Stage-manager).—The leading character in an Assamese dramatic performance is the Sütradhāra. As in the Sanskrit drama the expression iti Sūtra niskrāntah (then exit stage-manager) occurs at the end of the prologue of the Assamese plays. In the Sanskrit drama after his formal exit at the end of the prologue the stage-manager never enters the stage again and the whole performance is left to the actors themselves. But in the Assamese plays the case is quite different. It is true that according to the Indian tradition10 an actor styled Sthapaka, exactly like the Sütradhāra, enters the stage after the latter's exit, dances a Cari dance, introduces the play and then retires. But neither the Sütradhāra nor the Sthāpaka is heard of thereafter. The Sütradhära in an Assamese Bhāonā is, however, found present on the stage even after his formal exit at the conclusion of the prologue (Prastāvanā). He not only sings songs in chorus with gāyana-bāyana (singers and musicians) and recites ślokas and bhatimās but also controls and directs the performance from beginning to end supplying and explaining the links of the plot as given in the Sutras. The actors take part only in dialogue, march, battle. dance and action such as the breaking of bow, churning of curd. etc.

Nātya-šāstra, XVIII, 16. ff; Daša-rūpaka, III. 34-36.

^{10.} N.S., V. 149-153; D.R., III. 2; S.D., VI. 26 .

- (4) The Jester (Vidūṣaka).—The Vidūṣaka is a standing character of the Sanskrit drama. No dramatist, except perhaps Bhavabhūti, could ignore this character. This character is entirely absent in the Assamese plays. But to relieve the monotony of the performance the device of a caṅg (farcical interlude) is introduced from time to time. Some comic players extemporize the music, speech, song and dialogue in such farcical interludes which are, however, wholly unconnected with the play.
- (5) The choric song (Ankar gita).—In the Sanskrit plays songs are sung either by individual characters or by some one in the retiring room (Nepathya). In Assamese dramatic performances songs are all sung by the chorus.
- (6) Acts and scenes (Anka and Garbhānka).—A Sanskrit drama is divided into scenes and acts. The scenes are marked by the entrance of one character and the exit of another. The stage is never left vacant till the end of the Act, nor does any change of locality take place till then. The Assamese drama on the other hand has division neither of acts nor of scenes. The stage (rabhā) is never left vacant and the locality often changes from time to time according to the plot.

Probable influence of Vernacular drama of other places .-It is difficult to ascertain the extent of influence, if any, of the vernacular drama of other parts of India on the Assamese drama. The Rāsadhāri and Rāma-līlā of Upper India, the Lalitā of Western India, the Kathakali and Nalatangi of Southern India and the Bhavai of Guzarat had apparently no influence. "The Rājā of Kottarakkara (1575-1650 A.D.), an eminent scholar, was the first composer and originator of the Kathakali. Under his regime there was a revolutionary revival of the ancient folk-dance drama in a new garb and an improved form".11 One or two plays of Sankaradeva had appeared before 1575 A.D. So. Kathakali could have no influence on Assamese drama. The Bengal Yātrā was of very recent origin. One contemporary authority states that Mahāpuruşa Śankaradeva devised and gave performance with scenes of Cihna-yātrā at the age of 19 years (i.e. in 1468 A.D.), before he went on his first pilgrimage. According to another he did so immediately after his return from the first pilgrimage at the age of about 53 years (i.e. 1502 A.D.). During this pilgrimage which took 12 years to complete he visited Mithilā, Mathurā, Vrndāvana, Dvārakā, Purī and many other sacred places and other centres of learning. It is known that Vidyāpati Thākur of Mithilā (1348-1438 A.D.) composed his immortal songs in the Maithili language. Also about a century earlier Umāpati, the celebrated Maithilī poet, had written his drama, Pārijāta-haraņa in the Sanskrit-Prakrit-Maithilī language. It is nowhere stated that Sankaradeva, the originator of Assamese drama, ever had any occasion to witness representation of this play. Also, in this drama the characters used Sanskrit and Prakrit and the songs alone were in Maithili. On the other hand Sankaradeva dispensed altogether with Prakrit, used Sanskrit only in the ślokas and otherwise composed all his plays in the Brajabuli-Assamese language. So, the Maithili drama was really Sanskrit while the plays of Assamese were truly Assamese mixed with Brajabuli. Another vital point of difference is that in the Maithili drama there is no Sūtradhāra except in the prologue (Prastāvanā) and absolutely no stage-direction nor speech by the stage-manager whereas in the Assamese drama there are such directions and speeches in Brajabuli by him every now and then throughout the whole performance. Accordingly the latter could never have been written in imitation of the former. There is only one point of resemblance between the two. Both are one-act plays. This, however, means nothing, Recently four so-called plays including three written in Bengali have been found in Nepal. These are not plays as we understand them by the term. They contain nothing but songs. The time of this composition is supposed to have been about the eighteenth century A.D. They could have had no influence on the Assamese drama which had taken its birth at least two hundred years earlier. The evidence available shows unmistakably that the Assamese drama is the earliest among the regular vernacular dramatic works in India. Sankaradeva was its originator. Assamese prose and drama, as is at present known, occupy the first place among the vernacular literature of India.

Types of early Assamese Drama.—The plays in Assam are divided into three classes—Nāţ, Yātrā and Jhumurā.

Nāṭa.—The generic name for the Assamese drama is Nāṭa. But it conforms neither to the rules of Sanskrit Nāṭaka nor to those of a Nāṭikā. According to tradition a Nāṭaka should have the subject-matter taken from the epics or Purāṇas, five junctures, five to ten acts, all the sentiments, the dominant being heroic or erotic, a king, a god or a royal sage (rājarṣi) as the hero and a happy ending. In a Nāṭikā the subject-matter should not be traditional but invented, the hero a gay and self-controlled king, the sentiment erotic, the number of acts usually four and as its special features music, song and dance. In the Assamese Nāṭa (drama) has some elements of a Sanskrit Nāṭaka with a few exceptions, especially in the subject-matter, language and number of acts of Sanskrit drama. In the Assamese drama no distinction is made between Nāṭa and Nāṭaka. Śrīmanta Śaṅkaradeva used both these terms as also Yātrā to designate his plays.

Yatra.—The term Yātrā meant originally a religious procession and later a melodramatic performance. "In ancient India it was customary for ruling Princes, together with their ladies and the Court, to set out at appointed seasons, for a place of sacrifice up in the Vansprastha. The royal party proceeded to a hallowed wood, at the foot of the Snowy Mountains, where the golden soma grass grew. During the toilsome journey the Court chaplain (Purohita) and his priestly staff edified the distinguished pilgrims with deva lore and the "old story" (Purāna) of the beginning of things and of the cosmic order. But the boisterous train of followers required coarser food, and their full allowance of fun and licence was but rarely cut short. Gleemen, in grotesque attire, their beards and faces dyed, with rattles, bells and tambourines, danced or rather skipped along like a savage herd of giddy goats... Every grade of society from the gravest to the gayest and from the loftiest to the grossest, was represented in the Yatra or procession."15 In the image-procession of Assam of the present day also such operative performance is often witnessed, especially during the Phaguwa festival. "When the Muhammedans became rulers of India they abolished every music hall and play-house.... In spite of the Moslem precepts, dramatic activity was once more in full swing towards the end of the fourteenth century A.D., more particularly in Nepal and Tirhoot. But the literary quality of this aftercrop of Indian plays is far below the high level which was attained in Ujjain and Kanauj The Kṛṣṇaist cult being bright and artistic was admirably fitted to envigorate the effete Hindu theatre. Sacred operas were frequently produced in connection with the religious yatras even after they were detached from the temple precincts and associated with the secular stage."16 In Bengal the vātrās had a firm hold and the elegant Gīta-govinda of Javadeva of the twelfth century A.D. probably contributed to the later development of the Bengali yatras. Dr. P. Guha Thakurta writes: "The main difficulty in the way of arriving at definite conclusions in regard to the actual source of the yatra is the total absence of a chronological history of older yatras and their writers. The existing specimens belong to a much later period from 1800 A.D. downwards. If we were in possession of a really authentic list of all the yatras whether still in existence or not, we could have surmised something about their true nature and also the earlier methods of their production. It is quite probable that at a very early stage the yātrāwālās used to extemporise the music and words of the plays to suit a specific religious festival or social entertainment and that they made no serious attempt at literary composition or publication."17 The Assamese plays are all literary works and as songs, dance and music preponderate they (or at least some of them) may rightly be called yatras. Thus Kali-damana of Sankaradeva, Janma-yātrā of Gopāla Ātā and Nrsimha yātrās and Syamanta-harana of Daityāri are yātrās. They are apparently in imitation of the ancient religious processions. Unfortunately the first dramatic work in Assam, Cihna-yātrā is lost for ever.

^{13.} S.D., VI, 7-11.

^{14.} S.D. VI, 269-272: D.R., III 43-48.

^{15.} Horrwitz, The Indian Theatre, pp. 114, 116.

Towards the close of the fifteenth or in the first decade of the sixteenth century A.D. Śańkaradeva composed his first play, Cihna-yātrā, and staged it with painted scenes representing the seven Vaikunthas (or heavens of the Vaiṣṇavites). We find in the biography written by Rāmcaraṇa Ṭhākura:—

Vaikuntha nagara patate lekhiyā

Ańka karilanta tāra Dhaimālir ghosā pro

prathame lekhilâ

Dvitiye śloka racilā

Sūtra bhaţimāka

gītaka kariyā

Cinna sava bibhāgilā.18

It is stated that a Samnyāsi taught Sankaradeva the art of painting scenes. In the scene of each Vaikuntha tanks, gardens, bed of Ananta Nāga, Kalpataru tree and other heavenly objects ^{16.} Op. cit., pp. 176-178.

^{17.} The Bengali Drama, pp. 8-9.

^{18.} Sankara-carita, vv. 1361-62.

were painted, exactly as described in the Vaiṣṇava literature. Then Śrīmanta Śaṅkaradeva trained Bāyans (musicians), Pālīs (assistants) using Khola (a kind of drum) for the first time in Assam, and also actors (naṭuwās), collected masks (mukhās) and accessories (chōs), got a rabhā (theatre) erected and arranged for lights. After this on a certain night he gave the performance himself taking part in it. Five principal actors were introduced. They presided over five of the Vaikuṇṭhas, Rāmrām Guru over the sixth and Śaṅkaradeva himself over the seventh. Six boys dressed as maidens then entered the stage with garlands of lotus in hand and went as Lakṣmī to six of the Vaikuṇṭhas, only there was none in the Vaikuṇṭha presided over by Śaṅkaradeva himself. Then came the devotees (Pāriṣadas) to each Vaikuṇṭha to offer prayer. A vivid description is found in Śaṅkara-carita of Rāmacaraṇa Thākura.

In Sanskrit dramas there is no reference to any use of scenery in the representation. The Yavanikā (drop scene) remains at the background throughout the performance and scene, in the modern sense of the term, never used. Actual scenery was introduced even in Europe only about the time of the Renaissance (16th-17th centuries A.D.) But in Assam Śrīmanta Śańkaradeva used scenery representing the subject-matter of the play before that. He was perhaps the first to devise and use scenes in dramatic performance.

The Yavanikā (Āra Kāpōra: cf., Bicitra pameri vastra āra kari dhari) in the Assamese theatre is hung before an actor enters the stage. We find:—

> Dhaimāli edile prabešara belā hay, Raghu Sanātane āde tāka dharichay.¹⁹

Jhumurā.—Jhumurā is a short piece of one-act drama in which the songs supply the whole plot. The prose portion is recited by the Sūtradhāra and also by the actors in their dialogue in explaining the songs. The term Jhumurā is probably connected with Jhumari, a kind of Rāga. In Assamese there is a metre known as Jhumuri. But Jhumurā has probably no connection with it. In a song of Vidyāpati this terms Jhumari appears where it means a kind of song sung in chorus by a number of women,—

Gābaha sahi lori jhumari ma'ana Ārādhane janu.²⁰

^{19.} Rāmacarana Thākur, Śańkaracarita, v. 1392.

Vidyāpati Thākur, Padāvalī, ed. Nagendranatha Gupta, Bangīya Sahitya Parisad, p. 478.

L. 26

'O friends, sing jhumari, we go to worship Madana.'

Music, songs and dance.—The musical instruments used in an Assamese dramatic performance are Khöl and Mrdanga and varieties of Tālas (cymbals).

The airs (raga) of the dramatic songs are all taken from the Indian tradition. Sage Bharata, Sarngadeva, Damodara and Hanuman are all authorities on the subject. The primary musical modes of sound (raga) are six. Thus, according to Hanuman, the rāgas are-Mālava, Mallāra, Śri, Vasanta, Hindola and Karnāţa. Other writers give slightly different names. Each raga has six Rāginis regarded as its consorts, and their union produces several other musical modes. Thus Malava has dhanasi (dhanasri), mālasī, rāmakirī, sindhudā, āsāvarī and bhairavī as its consorts The Assamese poets treat all ragas and raginis simply as ragas. The origin of a few ragas, such as Kau, &c., is unknown. Among the pre-Vaisnava poets and siddhas Luipada, Minanatha, Saroja-vajra, Dāka, Mankara, Sukavi Narāyanadeva and Durgāvara composed songs in these ragas between eighth and fifteenth centuries A.D. Later Śrīmanta Śańkaradeva, Pītambara, Mādhavadeva and other Vaisnava poets did so from the fifteenth century onwards. The songs in Assam are intended for singing mostly in chorus. Each contains a refrain (dhruva) followed by lines of one or more stanzas (pada) and the concluding line or lines contain the name of the composer himself. The time is marked by beating of cymbals (tāla). The tālas, viz. ektāl, paritāl, viṣamatāla, kharmān, yati, dharam (dharana) yati, chutā, rūpaka and cok have also with a few exceptions been borrowed from Indian tradition. Politically and socially Assam was free from Muhammedan influence. So, in music also Assam was entirely uninfluenced by Muhammedan elements.

Dancing is based on rhythm and time.²¹ Dancing with pose of the dancer has also been borrowed from the Indian tradition. Thus, the pose of the Kṛṣṇa dance is indicated by Mṛgasīrṣaka hand. It is thus described: The thumb and little finger of each hand should be stretched out and the other three fingers clenched together and held downwards. When this hand is brought near the mouth the pose represents the playing of the flute.²² It should be noted that when the two hands in this state are brought together near the mouth but kept a little apart one below the other, in a slanting position, it looks as though the actor is playing on a flute (vamśi), the favourite musical instrument of Kṛṣṇa. Hence this is a characteristic pose.

^{21.} D.R., I. 13.

^{22.} N.S., IX. 82; Śri-hasta-muktāvali, 51, 598.

Important Plays: Śankaradeva

Sankaradeva, the originator of Assamese drama, was the best vernacular dramatist. His plays, except Patnī-prasāda, are complete and include all aspects of the Sanskrit drama in the prologue and Mukti-mangala. His aim was to propagate his new Kṛṣṇa cult. In his six extant plays he showed superiority and excellence of Kṛṣṇa worship. Thus in Kāli-damana Kāli's wives prayed to Kṛṣṇa as follows: —

Jāher cārio mukhya mūrti anupāma Rāma Kāma Aniruddha Vāsudeva nāma hena Bhagavanta Kṛṣṇa devatāra deva tohāri carane karo lakṣa koṭi seva.

And Kali himself, after his punishment, spoke thus: -

Garava gucāyali mora, viṣaya āpada ghora dūra kara ava moi, cinto caranaka toi dehu Hari mohi ohi śikṣā, māgi bhuñjaba bhikṣā bharamo tuvā guṇa gāi, karahu ataye karuṇā gosāi

In Pātnī-prasāda Kṛṣṇa exhibits the futility of sacrifice and other Vedic Karma-kāṇḍa and rewarded the wives of the insolent priestly Brāhmaṇas for their devotion to him.

In Keli-Gopāla Kṛṣṇa said to the cowherdesses who were weeping at his absence thus:—

> Ava sakhi vilāpa tāpa tyajaha bhakata-vatsala moka jāni bhakataka dukha dekhi hṛdi rahe nāhi Sankara kaha Hari-vānī.

In Rukminī-haraņa we find :-

Dekhu dekhu bhāṭaka mukhe Rukmiṇī Kṛṣṇa-guṇa śuniye, Kṛṣṇaka caraṇe śrāddha mātrā kayala, ataye bhakataka parama kṛpālu Kṛṣṇa, tanikar vaśya huyā gṛha-gṛhiṇi kayala, āḥ Hari-bhakatika mahimā kī kahaba

204 ASPECTS OF EARLY ASSAMESE LITERATURE

In Pārijāta-haraņa Nārada praises Kṛṣṇa in this way :-

Tuhu jagata-guru devaka devā, tohāri caraņe rahoka meri sevā, mukhe jono chādahu tuwā guņa nāma māgu ataye vara tohāri thāma.

And Indra with Saci prayed thus to Kṛṣṇa :-

Jaya jaya bhakata-bhaya-hārī, jaya jaya Iśvara Murāri jākeri nāma ucari pāi padārasa cāri māgabo bhikṣā paridhāna kaya kanthā.

and later :-

Ohi Indrapada āpada ghora, dūra kara Hari kumati mora māgabo bhikṣā paridhāna kaya kantha, dharabo tohāri bhakati panthā.

In Rāma-vijaya Rāma is praised thus: - Rāmaka caraņe śaraņa lehu jāni Sava aparādhaka marakha tuhu svāmī.

Sankaradeva has taken his plots from the Rāmāyana and the Purāṇas. His creative fancy is rich and his poetic refinement and expression of depth of feeling, specially in Keli-Gopāla, are indeed excellent. He is all serious and his dramatic qualities of vigour, life and action prove his genius. The plots of his plays are given below in outline:—

(i) Kāli-damana (Taming of the Kāliya-nāga).—A very venomous snake, the Kāli Nāga, lived in the Kālindī pool and rendered its water poisonous. One day Kṛṣṇa came with cattle and other cowherd boys to its bank. The boys and cattle happened to drink this water and they all died. Kṛṣṇa later restored them to life. He resolved to drive the snake off the pool and with that object in view jumped into it. He began to stir and agitate the water violently and this attracted the snake to the surface. Kāli bit Kṛṣṇa in anger and held him in a firm grip with the coil of its tail. Kṛṣṇa lay there motionless as if dead. The news of this soon reached Gokula and Kṛṣṇa's parents and other cowherds and cowherdesses hurried to the pool weeping. After a while Kṛṣṇa extricated himself with a violent jerk and standing on the expanded hoods of Kāli began a cosmic dance. Kāli was soon overpowered bleeding through mouth and nose. Then his wives with children appeared and prayed for mercy. Kāli himself bowed down at Kṛṣṇa's feet and began a prayer. Kṛṣṇa thereupon left him and directed him to leave the pool and proceed to Ramaṇaka island. After this Kṛṣṇa joined his parents and others on the shore. As evening approached they all decided to pass the night in the forest of Vṛndāvana. But at the dead of night a forest fire raged and spread round them. Then to save his parents and others Kṛṣṇa swallowed the fire and then all went home safe. The source of the play is Bhāgavata Purāṇa.

- (2) Patnī-prasāda.—The cowherd boys were hungry. They asked Krsna, their companion, to arrange food. The latter sent them to the hermitage close by where the Brahmans were performing a sacrifice. The boys went and begged the Brahmans for food. The latter, proud as they were of their learning and efficacy. of sacrifice, refused to give any and dismissed them saying they were gods of the earth and Krsna was nobody. The boys returned and reported this to Krsna who then sent them for food to the Brahmans' wives in the settlement. The pious consorts of the Brahmans on hearing of the arrival of Krsna, their Lord, went out to see him carrying presents of sweets and other delicacies in hand. They saw Kṛṣṇa, the object of their devotion, and paid homage to him. The Brahmans at first resisted. But eventually they too adopted the cult of Bhakti to Krsna in preference to learning, rituals, and sacrifice. The story of this drama also is taken from the Bhāgavata Purāna.
- (3) Keli-Gopāla (sportive dance of Kṛṣṇa).—One moonlit night in autumn Kṛṣṇa sitting on a sand-bank of the Yamunā played an enchanting and amorous song on his flute; and thus attracted the cowherdesses of Vṛndāvana to come to the spot and they joined Kṛṣṇa in a Rāsa (sportive dance).

This enchanted and exhilarated them so much that they forgot themselves and began to show disrespect to Kṛṣṇa. To punish them for their arrogance Kṛṣṇa took one of the maidens and slipped away. The milk-maids, thus deserted, suffered extreme pangs of separation and began to search for him in the jungle. Later Kṛṣṇa left alone the maiden with whom he had eloped as well for a similar offence and reappeared among the maidens he had left behind. Then they began to dance in a circle (Rāṣa-maṇḍala). After this they waded together into the Yamunā and sported in water. On hearing the first cock-crow Kṛṣṇa sent them home. This continued for several nights. One night a Yakṣa named Śaṃkhacūda molested one of the dancing girls. Kṛṣṇa pursued and killed him.

This is the best among Sankaradeva's plays. The poetic beauty and expression of depth of feeling are quite apparent. The attachment of the cowherdesses was ecstatic but selfish. They in joy forgot their husbands and children and forgot themselves. They had worshipped Goddess Kātyāyanī for obtaining Kṛṣṇa as their husband for earthly pleasure and they got the desired object but no salvation. Later, they longed and prayed for joining their soul with the supreme soul which Kṛṣṇa embodied. This they achieved by selfless devotion at Kurukṣetra. The Bhāgavata Purāṇa provides Śankaradeva with the plot of the drama.

(4) Rukminī-harana (Abduction of Rukminī).—On hearing praises from two Bhāṭas Kṛṣṇa and Rukminī fell in love with each other without seeing. King Bhismaka of Kundina also selected Kṛṣṇa for marriage of his daughter Rukmini, but his son Rukma persuaded him instead to give Rukmini in marriage to prince Siśupāla. On information being conveyed Siśupāla came with several other princes to Bhismaka's residence. When news of this reached Rukmiņi's ears she sent her trusted priest, Vedanidhi, to Kṛṣṇa at Dvārakā with a letter to come and save her. Kṛṣṇa accordingly hastened to Kundina and saw Sisupala and others on the reception ground. Then when Rukmini returned from the temple of Bhavānī after finishing worship and appeared before the assembled guests Krsna caught her by the hand, put her into his chariot and drove away. Sisupala and other princes in anger pursued him and gave a fight. But they were all worsted. Later, on the way, Rukma attacked Kṛṣṇa demanding return of Rukmini. Kṛṣṇa badly defeated him but spared his life at the entreaties of Rukminī. The marriage was later solemnized at Dvārakā. The story of the drama is taken from the Harivamsa and Bhagavata Purina.

The names of Vedanidhi, Surabhi and Haridasa are of Sankaradeva's invention. In this play love of Kṛṣṇa and Rukmiṇī is finely depicted and the characters are well-drawn.

(5) Pārijāta-haraņa (Taking away of the Pārijāta).—Sage Nārada came with Indra one day to Kṛṣṇa for help against Narakāsura of Prāgjyotiṣapura. At that time Nārada presented him with a heavenly flower, Pārijāta, Kṛṣṇa put it on the head of Rukmiṇī who happened to be present there at the time. Then Nārada went and reported this to Kṛṣṇa's wife Satyabhāmā and excited her jealousy and anger. In the meantime Indra prayed for Kṛṣṇa's help for recovery from Narakāsura the ear-rings of Aditi, the umbrella of Varuna, Mani Parvata and the heavenly maidens forcibly taken away. Kṛṣṇa promised help. Then Nārada reappeared and reported to Krsna Satyabhāmā's jealousy and wrath. Krsna ran to Satyabhāmā and attempted to console her. But she was in a violent temper and could not be appeared. Eventually Krsna promised to fetch the Pārijāta tree itself from Indra's Amaravati and then only was she pacified. Krsna then riding on Garuda with Satyabhāmā flew to Prāgiyotisapura and killed Naraka in a fierce battle. He recovered the ear-rings of Aditi and other things and returned them to their respective owners at Amaravati and sent the maidens in Naraka's harem to Dvārakā. On their way back to Dvārakā Satyabhāmā saw in the Nandana forest a pārijāta tree and wanted to have its flowers. Accordingly Krsna sent Narada to Indra to ask for the same. But Indra would not allow a heavenly flower to be taken for a women of the earth. This led Krsna to uproot the pārijāta tree. put it on Garuda's back and resume the journey. Indra came and offered resistance. A fight followed in which Indra was badly defeated. He admitted Krsna to be the Lord of the universe. and above all gods and men. Kṛṣṇa then returned home and planted the pārijāta tree just in front of Satyabhāmā's residence.

The beauty of this play is marred to some extent by the vulgar quarrel and exchange of coarse and undignified language between Sacī and Satyabhāmā. The main source of this episode is the Visnu Purāna.

(6) Śrī-Rāma-vijaya (Victory of Rāma).—One day sage Viśvāmitra came to Daśaratha, king of Ayodhyā, and with the latter's permission took Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa to his hermitage for protection of his sacrifice from depredations of demons (Rākṣasas). After their arrival at the hermitage two demons, Mārica and Subāhu, appeared and began to rain blood. Rāma with his arrows drove them off and the sage safely completed his sacrifice. After this Viśvāmitra took the two princes to Mithilā, where princes from far and near had assembled for the svayaṃ-vara (selection of bridegroom) of Sītā, daughter of king Janaka. According to a voice in the sky Sītā had been destined to be the consort of him who could skilfully manipulate the gigantic ajagava bow of Sīva and properly put an arrow to it.

None of the assembled princes could move or bend the bow. But Rāma dexterously put an arrow and in bending the bow to shoot it broke it in two. Thereupon Sitā advanced and garlanded Rāma acknowledging him as her husband. Seeing this the assembled princes rose in a body and attacked him. A battle followed in which they were defeated and turned out of the place. The marriage was then solemnized after which the party set out for Ayodhyā. On the way, however, Paraśurāma intercepted them and attempted to kill Rāma with his axe for having broken his master's bow. A fight ensued in which Parasurama was badly beaten and his way to heaven blocked for ever.

In this play Sankaradeva deviated from the original text of the Rāmāyana of Vālmīki in a few particulars. In the Rāmāyana, Viśvāmitra took Rāma and Laksmana to the sacrifice of king Janaka at Mithilā with a view to show them the ajagava bow of Siva. There was no svayambara nor any assembly of princes. When Rama was shown the bow he, out of curiousity, took it out of the box and broke it in two. There was no voice in the sky about selection of Sita's groom. Janaka himself had made a vow to give Sītā in marriage to him who could break the bow. Again according to the Rāmāyana Viśvāmitra never accompanied Rāma and his party to Ayodhyā, nor did he fight with Paraśurāma on the way. There is also slight variation from the original text in the episode of Marica and Subahu. It may be added that the ludicrous scene about the assembled princes' amorous exclamations at the sight of Sītā and their humiliating punishment by the maids have marred to a certain extent the artistic beauty of the play. The source of the story is the Rāmāyana.

Mādhavadeva

The next great dramatist was Mādhavadeva. Five of his genuine plays have been found. They are-Arjuna-bhañjana. Cor-dhara, Bhumi-luțiwa, Pimpara-gucuwa and Bhojana-vihara. Three other plays, viz: Bhūṣaṇa-haraṇa, Rāṣa Jhumurā and Kotorā-khelā have also been found. They are believed to be spurious. They contain no prologue nor any Sanskrit śloka. They also offend against the tenets of the Ekasrana cult of which Mādhavadeva was a high priest. Their language also differs from the dramatic style of Madhavadeva. That of Kotora-khela is undignified, coarse and vulgar.

The best plays of Madhavadeva are Arjuna-bhanjana and Bhojana-vihāra. The plot of the former is this: - Yaśodā was giving suck to child Kṛṣṇa. At that time the cowherdesses reported that the boiling milk was over-flowing the pot. She hastily out down Krsna and ran to the oven to attend to it. At this Kṛṣṇa, in a rage, pelted a stone thereby breaking down the churning pot of Yaśodā and spilt the milk. Then he entered the room, began to eat fresh butter from a pot and threw portions thereof to the monkeys assembled close by. In the meantime Yaśodā returned and found Kṛṣṇa out. She grew furious and chased and eventually caught Kṛṣṇa. Then she attempted to tie Kṛṣṇa up but found the rope short by two fingers' breadth. She added fresh rope, but found it short as much. At last she succeeded in tying Kṛṣṇa to a mortar and then left. Then Kṛṣṇa began to move passing in between two Arjuna trees close by and dragging with force the mortar behind him. In so doing he pulled down the trees which fell to the ground with a tremendous noise. On hearing this sound the cowherds ran to the spot and set Kṛṣṇa free. The sources of the work are Bhāgavata Purāṇa and Bilvamaṅgala-stotra.

(2) The Bhojana-vihāra (the picnic).—Kṛṣṇa arranged a picnic on the pasture ground in Vṛndāvana and went there with other cowherd boys driving their cattle in front of them. While they were at breakfast there sitting in a circle with Kṛṣṇa in the centre their cattle strayed away. Kṛṣṇa went out in search of them asking his companions to continue the meal. He could not find the missing cattle. He returned to the place of excursion and found also the boys gone. He bewailed their loss and came to the conclusion that Brahmā had concealed the boys with their cattle. The play abruptly terminates at this stage. The concluding portion of the plot is told in a different play, Brahmā-mohana, which, however, does not appear to have been written by Mādhavadeva. The remaining plays of this dramatist depict clever deceptions of child Kṛṣṇa.

Gopāla Ātā

The next dramatist was Gopāla Ātā of Bhavānipura. His two plays—Janma-yātrā and Gopī-Uddhava-samvāda—have been found. He gave the first performance of Janma-yātrā within the precincts of his Kīrtanaghara at Bhavānipura in the presence of Mādhavadeva. This was followed on the following day by a performance of the Bokā-yātrā or Pācati in the same compound. Later at the request of Gopāla Ātā, Mādhavadeva incorporated in Janma-yātrā a Bargīta of Sankaradeva beginning with the line, "Hariko bayane heri māi". Janma-yātrā is a fine play.

Janma-yātrā (Drama of the birth of Kṛṣṇa).—Devaka, brother of king Ugrasena of Bhoja, gave away Devakī, his L. 27 daughter, to Vasudeva in marriage. At the time of departure of the marriage party Kamsa, son of Ugrasena, in order to honour and please the married couple himself drove the bridal chariot. On the way he heard an awful voice in the sky that the eighth child of Devaki would kill him. Thus startled he attempted to kill Devaki, but desisted when Vasudeva promised to hand over to him each child as soon as born. Vasudeva and Devaki were, however, kept in chains in a cell. Vasudeva kept his words. The eighth child, Lord Krsna was born in the prison at midnight while it was raining and the guards were all asleep. Vasudeva stealthily carried the infant to Gokula and left it by the side of unconscious Yasoda, wife of Nanda, who had just given birth to a female child. Vasudeva picked the latter up and carried her into the prison-cell at Mathura and laid her by the side of weeping Devaki. The child began to cry, the sentries awoke and hurried to the palace of Kamsa and gave information of the birth to the king. The latter ran to the cell, took out the crying child and violently struck her against a rock to kill her. But she assumed a divine form and vanished into the air giving him a warning that his slayer was born somewhere, Kamsa then released Vasudeva and Devaki. In the meantime there was great rejoicing at Gokula where the cowherds and cowherdesses solemnized the birth of Nanda's son with presents, sports and merry-making. The source of the drama is Bhagavata Purana.

Gopī-Uddhava-samvāda is of inferior merit. It contains several Bargītas of Śaṅkaradeva and Mādhavadeva.

Minor Dramatists

The next dramatist was Rāmacaraṇa Ṭhākura. Only one play written by him, viz., Kaṃsa-vadha, has been found. This is a beautiful play and it follows closely in structure the plays of Saṅkaradeva.

Kaṃsa-vadha (Slaying of Kaṃsa).—Sage Nārada comes to Kaṃsa and warns him that his deadly enemies, Rāma and Kṛṣṇa are growing up at Gokula. Thus alarmed Kaṃsa devises means of killing them. He sends Akrūra to Gokula to fetch Rāma and Kṛṣṇa with other cowherds to his capital at Mathurā, to attend a great Dhanuryāga sacrifice. Really he intends to kill the two boys there with the help of his elephants and wrestlers. Akrūra fetches Rāma and Kṛṣṇa to Mathurā. While passing through the streets of the capital Kṛṣṇa kills a washerman for his insolence, rewards a decorator for putting on them fine clothes, blesses Sudāmā for presents of flower, and straightens Kubuji, Kaṃsa's hunch-backed maid, for presents of sandal and scents. In the amphitheatre Kṛṣṇa breaks down the royal bow, slays the mighty elephant, Kuvalaya and kills the chief wrestler, Cāṇūra. Balarāma similarly kills the wrestler Muṣṭika in a contest. Kṛṣṇa then jumps up the high platform, grapples with Kaṃsa thereon, throws him to the ground and presses him down to death. He then releases his captive parents and reinstates Ugrasena, in the throne.

Bhūṣaṇa Dvija composed Ajāmila Upākhyana and Daityāri Thākur wrote Nṛṣimha-yātrā and Syamanta-harana.

Among the later dramas may be mentioned the Kumārā-haraņa the production of Rucideva-suta, Śataskandha-vadha of Rucideva, Śītā-haraṇa, Durvāsa-Bhojana and Bali-chalana of Gopāla, Bhīṣma-niryāna of Mādhava and Sindhurā-yātrā of Jayadeva. This last is a long play in imitation of Śaṅkaradeva. These dramatists have introduced a metre, the muktāvalī, not used by Śaṅkaradeva or Mādhavadeva. The following lines from Śitā-haraṇa may serve as an example of this metre.

Hā prāņa Şītā geli kona bhitā,

Nāśā ki nimite e

Tohor santāpe kene prāņa dhari ācho

Bāpe rajya dilā

Kaikeyî nişedhilâ

Banaka pathāilā e

Maro mai āta Hrdi-nukta Sītā

Kaikeyir ranga hauka. nāsā ki nimitta

Bhailo mai ati bhītā e

Sītāka tejiā moka āge māri khāsa Suna re rākṣasa moka māri khāsa Tejaha Sītāka e > āro abilambe Bharate bhuñjoka rājya, Tini hante āilo aranyaka pāilo Sītāka haruvāilo e

Bhaiyāi Lakhāi prāņa rākhi deše cala.

In the succeeding period many other plays were composed by several other dramatists. It became customary for the Adhikāras or heads of important satras to compose dramas following the occasion of their accession to the headship of their monasteries. The practice is still continuing.

The Assamese Theatre

For periodical performance (Bhāonā) there is no permanent stage in Assam. A temporary theatre is erected within the precincts of the Namghara or Kirtanghara or the performance is held within the spacious hall of the Namghara itself. temporary theatre is called a Rabhā or Sabhā-ghar. It is a large open pandal furnished with a covering as a canopy of ornamental cloth or grass and appropriately decorated. The ground is divided into two blocks separated by a wide passage from one end to the other in which the spectacles are exhibited. At the upper end of the marked arena is placed a sacred manuscript as the Thapana (altar of God) as it is customary to worship Krsna when a dramatic performance is held (Bhāonā karile Kṛṣṇa pūjibe lāgaya). At the lower end of the arena is the Dohār (Orchestra) or the place of chorus and musicians (gāyan-bāyan). Behind the Dohār is spread a painted curtain (ār-bastra) which takes the place of the Yavanikā of the Sanskrit plays. Before an actor enters the stage he begins his preliminary dance behind this curtain and steps into the stage as soon as the curtain is drawn aside. Behind this curtain and often at some distance is the green-room (Cho-ghara or Nepathyagrha of the Sanskrit plays). In this room are kept all the chos (accessories) including bows, arrows, weapons, masks, dress etc., and the actors are painted and dressed therein. Near the Thapana an enclosure is often made as the waiting room for the actors.

The seats.—Near the Thapana rugs or carpets are spread on the ground on both sides of the arena for distinguished visitors including Gosais and Mahantas to sit on. On the remaining available space are spread on which the general public sit packed together, On one side of the Rabha and at some distance behind the male audience similar mats are spread for the females to sit on.

The lights.—Performance is, almost always, held all night from about 9 P.M. till daybreak. Lighting arrangements are therefore necessary. Often chandeliers and hanging wax-candles with glass chimneys as also gachās (Candle-stands) in the form of trees with branches to hold hundreds of earthen lamps of mustard oil are used. Also the Rabhā is often lighted by stationary Āriās (torches) of earthen cups. In such cups seeds of cotton are put and kept soaked in mustard oil. These are lighted with or without thick wicks of cotton yarn. Movable Āriās or mahalās (torches) made by wrapping rags round the forked ends of sticks or split bamboo and kept always soaked in mustard oil are also used as occasion arises. Brilliant and dazzling light of mahatā (Pyrótechnic light) is also used when an actor enters or dances.

The Performance

The preliminaries (Pürvaranga).-According to the Natyaśāstra23 the preliminaries of a dramatic performance consist of the beating of drum (pratyāhāra), sitting of singers and musicians (avatarana), beginning of the chorus (arambha), tying of musical instruments (āśrāvaṇā), turning up and manipulation of instruments and hands (samsvadanā), harmony of music of stringed instruments and beating of time (āsāritā) and then a song (gīta) for propitiating the gods. This is followed by a violent dance (tandava) which increases in intensity as it proceeds. Then a banner is hoisted (utthāpana) by the Sūtradhāra. This is followed by a whirling round the stage (parivartana) with salutations to the guardians of the world. Then follows the Nandi. These preliminaries are followed in the Assamese Purvaranga with certain modifications. It is called Dhemāli. It begins with preliminary beating of drums (Khol) by the drummers (bayan), sitting in rows, and beating of time by the chorus (gayan) with cymbals (tāla) standing behind in a semi-circle. Simultaneously a song known as dhemālir ghosā is begun in chorus by gāyans. This concert is known as saru dhemāli. The drummers then stand up and begin the bar dhemāli followed by deva dhemāli. In certain places (at Bardowa and some other places) Pūrva-ranga consists of Rāma dhemāli, na dhemāli, bar dhemāli, ghosā dhemāli and deva dhemāli. Then the drummers dance in a ring or whirl round the stage beating the drums all the time. This is followed by a concert in praise of the preceptor (guru-ghātā). After this the Sūtradhāra enters and begins his violent dance which increases in intensity as it goes on. At the conclusion of his dance he recites the Nandi.24

The actors (Naţuwā or bhāwarīyā).—The Assamese term for an actor is Bhāwarīyā or Naṭuwā. This word, Naṭuwā, is the same as Sanskrit, narttaka (dancer, mimic or mummer). The principal actor in a dramatic performance is undoubtedly the Sūtradhāra as stated above.

^{23.} N.S., V. 6, 25.

^{24.} Rāmacaraņa, Śankera-carita, vv. 1484-87, 1492-3.

According to the Nāṭya-śāstra²5 rôles may or may not be played by persons of appropriate age and sex. Thus, man may play woman's part and woman man's. Also the young may play the rôle of the old or aged and vice versa.²6 In an Assamese dramatic performance, however, women have no place. The rôle of both males and females is always played by males. In regard to age, however, no distinction is made between the young and the old. Generally, however, the parts of women, Rāma, Kṛṣṇa and such other characters are played by boys and those of kings, ministers, warriors, demons, bards, Śiva, sages and such others by adult males.

Decoration and accessories.—The Natya-śästra classes representation under four main heads,27 viz., representation by

- (1) body movement (angābhinaya), (2) speech (vācikābhinaya),
- (3) expressions of feelings and sentiments (sāmānyābhinaya), and
- (4) by accessories (āhāryābhinaya).

The accessories form part of the decoration in (Nepathya) which is sub-divided into four groups, (a) model work (Pusta), (b) ornaments (Alańkāra), (c) decoration of the body (aṅgaracanā) and (d) animals (saʾjīva). 28

The model work is of three kinds, consisting of (i) those made of bamboo and covered with leather or cloth (sandhima), (ii) those made by mechanical process (vyājima), and (iii) those covered with cloth (veṣṭita).²⁹ These include chariot, tree, moon, large snake and such other.

The ornaments include (i) garlands (mālya), (ii) artistic ornaments (ābharaṇa) and (iii) garments (vāsas). The artistic ornaments are of four kinds: Those worn in limbs perforated (ābhedya): such as ear-ring (kuṇḍala); those to be tied up (bandhanīya): buttock-string (sroṇī-sūtra), woman's girdle (mekhalā), tinkling-bells (kinkiṇī), for example those to be thrown or spread up (prakṣepya) like anklets (nūpura), shawl (vastrābharaṇa); and those superimposed or placed in or upon a body (āropya)—gold chain (hema-sūtra), necklace (hāra), for example ^{25.} XII. 166.

^{26.} Op. cit. XVI. 1-3.

^{27.} Op. cit., VIII and X.

^{28.} Op. cit., XXI.

^{29.} Op. cit., XXI, 5-7.

The garments of the actors include three classes: (i) the spot less (śuddha), (ii) the gay or variegated (vicitra) and (iii) the dirty or tattered (malina). Pious or religious men and women, gods, yakṣas, Brāhmaṇas, Kṣatriyas and such other characters wear spotless garments; the intoxicated and insane characters as also persons in mourning or on a journey, ascetics and such others put on dirty or tattered clothes; and heroes, warriors, lovers, kings, ministers and some others wear the gay garment. The colour of the dress is an important element in matters of sentiment, special instruction is given on the mode of wearing the hair of women and beard and whiskers of men.

In bodily decoration colour form an important ingredient. The actors paint their faces in appropriate colours. There are four elementary colours, viz., white, blue, yellow and red. Pigments of different hues are obtained by mixing them in different proportions. Thus a lotus colour is obtained by mixing white with red. Nārāyaṇa, Vāsuki, Daityas, Dānavas, Rākṣasas, Piṣācas and such other actors are to be painted black; Yakṣas, Gandharvas, Vidyādharas and many others golden yellow and the people of Eastern and Central India light blue and brown.

Masks of animals, birds, fish, &c., and arms and accoutrements made of light wood or bamboo are in general use.

In Assamese bhāonās such decorations and accessories as follows are also used.

- (a) Assamese accessories (Cho) include Pusta and Sajjīva of the Indian stage. Masks form the principal accessories. Actors playing the parts of certain gods, asuras, rākṣasas, monkeys, bears, birds and reptiles wear masks with appropriate cloak, wing or tail. Masks of Brahmā, Ganeśa, Cakravāka, Bakāsura, Rāvaṇa, Śataskandha, Vāsuki, Hanūmān, Jāmbuvān, Garuḍa, Varāha and such others may be cited as examples. Model works include chariot, throne, mountain, tree, animal, snake, fish, bird, bow, arrow, sword, javelin, spear, club, mace, trident, shield, coat of mail, and such other objects. The ingredients (Upakaraṇa) as in the Sanskrit plays, are light wood, bamboo, cane, cloth, jute, leather, cotton, hair of animals, feather of birds, gold, silver, tinfoil, mica, metallic thread, chalk, pigments, lac and wax. Iron and heavy substances are not used.
- (b) Bodily decoration (Kachan) includes (1) decoration with garlands, false hair, false beard and whiskers, &c., (2) decoration with ornaments of gold, silver and precious stones, (3) decoration with suitable garments and (4) face-painting.

Male actors wear crown, cap, matted hair, false beard and whiskers and hair suitable to age and position. Thus Krsna wears a crown of peacock's tail a sage, a head of false white hair and similar beards and whiskers indicating age and a king or a warrior false black mustaches. Female characters, if young, tie their false black hair in a single knot and, if old or aged, false grey hair loose.

All kinds of Assamese ornaments are worn by the actors appropriate to age and sex. Tinkling bells (ghugurā) and anklets (nepūr) are also used.

The garment is peculiar. The Sutradhara wears a long flowing gown reaching down the heels, a bodice covering the bust and a high turban or crown on the head. This is also the case with chief minister, only with this difference that his head-dress is a cap. Kings, nobles and warriors put on trousers (thengas) and appropriate bodice and head-dress. Boy actors wear white cloth (bhuni). Krsna's waist-cloth is of yellow silk; his head-dress is a Tālani (peacock's tail ornamented with precious stones and mica-pieces) and his bodice is of blue colour. Female actors put on flowing white or coloured gowns (mekhalās) with ornamental coloured bodices, sages wear light waist-cloths and scarves of pale red colour (geruva), ascetics rags and Siva a tiger skin. Silver bonds are artistically worn by female characters and boys.

Faces of actors are painted. This follows closely the Indian tradition. Four paints, viz., hingul (red lead), hāitāl (yellow orpiment), nila (indigo) and dhal (chalk) are used for the purpose and different shades and hues are made by their admixture.

ASSAMESE VERSIONS OF THE RAMAYANA

BY

U. C. LEKHARU

The Rāmāyana portraying Indian culture and ideals had been made very popular in Assam by the various recensionists who flourished in different periods of history. Assamese literature may boast of its priority in producing the Rāmāyana over all other provincial Aryan languages. For, there was no Rāmāyana in any other language when the first Assamese Rāmāyana poet Mādhava Kandali rendered Vālmīki's Rāmāyana into Assamese verse. Not only that, the Rāmāyana appeared in varied forms—in verse, in prose, in songs. There are five versions of the Rāmāyana in Assamese and each of a different type.

The Rāmāyana probably gained more popularity after Rāmānanda of the fourteenth century had preached the Rāma cult. It was through the disciples of Rāmānanda that the worship of Rāma had spread widely in northern and middle India (Sir R. G. Bhandarkar, Vaisnavism and Saivism). This wave reached Assam through the local aspirants who went about the holy places in quest of knowledge and religious merit. The Rāmāyaṇa poet Mādhava Kandali flourished towards the end of the fourteenth century A.D. He composed the verses of the Rāmāyaṇa at the request of King Mahamanikya. Sankaradeva in his Uttara Kanda has referred to him as a predecessor and flawless poet. The Kathā-gurucarita of Barpeta says that Rāghavācāryya, an aged contemporary of Śankaradeva's teacher Mahendra Kandali, was the disciple of Madhava Kandali. Further details regarding the date of the poet has been discussed in my Asamiya Ramayana Sāhitya (pages 33-36).

The poet had no other work in other provincial languages before him to serve as model or to imitate. He therefore made verses direct from the Sanskrit original—the Adikāvya of Vālmīki. He says:—

"Valmiki wrote in various rhymes. I have, with great care, looked into them and have written in condensed form what I could understand in my own way. Who there is, who will understand all the rasas? The poets write in the ways of the people. Sometimes they supply things of their own and sometimes they lengthen as the subjects would demand. It should be borne in mind that these are not words of God but are the creation of man. So one should not take offence at my diversions." At another place he says—

"The great sage Vālmīki has produced the Rāmāyaṇa. In fact he has created nectar for the world, etc." He has also said that he has inserted kāvya-rasa at the words of king Mahāmāṇikya.

Mādhava Kandali's Rāmāyaṇa extant till now have five cantoes only, that is from Ayodhyā to Lankā. The other two cantoes—the Ādi and the Uttarā are believed to have been lost. The Ādi and the Uttarā were supplemented by Mādhavadeva and Śankaradeva respectively. Mādhava Kandali's mission having been to reproduce the Kāvya only he probably had left out the two cantoes, the Sanskrit originals of which also are taken to be later additions. There is a confusing reference made by the poet himself to the effect that he made verses of the seven cantoes. This has led scholars to think that Kandali had actually rendered all the seven cantoes. But it should be noted that the poet made the reference only towards the end of the Lanka Kāṇḍa. The other versions of the Assamese Rāmāyaṇas so far discovered also do not contain these two cantoes.

The special characteristics of the Rāmāyaṇa of Mādhava Kandali may be summarized as follows:—

Mādhava Kandali gives local colour to the descriptions of nature, men and the works of men. His language is forceful and full of apt similies, metaphors, idioms and phrases, some taken from the original, some from the local language and some built by himself. He gives photographic and dramatic descriptions of scenes. He adopts various rhymes suited to the various themes. There are also verses which are exact translations from the original. In similies and metaphors he deviates sometimes from the original and there is seen the influence of his age. For instance, he compares the palace of Rama with that of Kailasa whereas in the original it has been compared with the dwelling place of Indra. At the time of Kandali Siva worship predominated in Assam and that is why Siva's thought is uppermost in his mind. For some of his diversions one would do well to read the descriptions of Manthara, of Citrakuta, of the search of the monkeys for Sītā at the command of Sugrīva, Hanumanta's fight with Rāksasas at Madhuvana and the subsequent burning of Lanka,

The Rāmāyana of Mādhava Kandali was first published by late Mādhavachandra Bardalai some fifty years back. Two other editions were brought out a few years back by Paṇḍit Kanak-chandra Sarma of Nowgong, and Prasannalal Choudhury of Barpeta.

Gīti-Rāmāyaṇa or Durgābarī Rāmāyaṇa.—Durgabāra, an inhabitant of Kāmākhyā or Nilācala worked out a condensed version of the Rāmāyaṇa in songs known as Gīti-Rāmāyaṇa. The poet flourished during the reign of the Koch king Viswa Sinha (1515-1540 A.D.). In Beulā-ākhyāna, the poet's other work, he has referred to the king and has also given his own genealogy. He writes, "I bow down to the great king Viswa Sinha of Kamatāpura and also to his fortyeight consorts and eighteen princes."

He again says—"The village Nīlācala is the best place in the whole world. There is Pārvatī, the destroyer of the Asuras.

"Bāhuvala Śikdār is a Gandharva incarnate. This song is spread by Durgābara."

Further—"Durgābara, son of Chandradhara, composed this beautiful song." The songs predominate in this work and verses are interspersed between the songs. The songs are lyrical, each complete in itself and yet forming a part of the whole Rāmāyana. They contain varied tunes or Rāgas as the poet calls them. The names of the Rāgas are also given. These are as follows:—

Belawār, Barāri, Guñjari, Dhanaśrī, Rāmagiri, Ahir, Paţamañjari, Bhāṭiyālī, Vasanta, Suhāi, Mañjari, Megha Mandal, Devamohan, Śrī Gandhakāli, Mārawār, Devajini, Ākāśamandalī.

The work shows the influence of Mādhava Kandali in some of the verses. But he shows originality in his selection of the scenes and in his twisting some of the facts to suit mass psychology. Dr. B. Kakati in his Puraņi Asamiyā Sāhitya refers to this work as a folk edition of the Vālmīki Rāmāyana.

The Adi and the Uttara of this work have not yet been discovered. This work was first published by late Visayachandra Biswasi of Hajo some thirty years ago and is out of print at present.

The facts that seem to be the poet's creations are the following: ___

 While in forest Rāma and Sītā pass their time by playing at dice, playing Kheri, etc.
 Sītā sees the golden deer and entreats Rāma to bring it to her alive, so that she might tame it and keep it with her. 3. At Citrakūṭa Rāma was in grief but Sītā created Ayodhyā by her art in the forest, and Rāma, Sītā, Lakṣmaṇa and other courtiers indulge in the Caitrāvalī festival (festival of the month of Caitra or Vasantotsava) and plays with moṭ (it is a kind of play with water. See for reference Tripurā Buranji, D.H.A.S., Assam). 4. Sītā, carried away by Rāvaṇa wails at her fate and also thinks that Rāma coming back from the hunt would be disappointed and would suspect her character. In fact Rāma comes back and does as Sītā imagines.

A translation of Sītā's wailing is given below:-

"O fate, unavoidable is the effect of Karma. I have brought blemish to the sacred family. I have become the cause of the ruin of the family. It is for my sake that I sent my master and also Laksmana in his search. Rayana found me alone in the cottage and took me away. Thus I have been ruined by my own action. When my master will return from the hunt and will not find me within he will surely roam about in the forest and will pass his time in anxiety. People will say against me and my master will believe in these and think many things and also that I had sent Laksmana with a bad motive. All evils will be ascribed to me. (Rāma will think): The unchaste Sītā has fled away and left her own husband because she suffered a great deal in the forest life. The woman, so good in prosperity, has left in adversity. Surely a woman is not one's own. Thus Nārāyaņa will wait and upbraid me. I am disappointed for life and will not see you again. The mother looks downcast in overwhelming grief. This is said by Durgādāsa."

Giti Rāmāyaṇa represents a type of literature of the early period and is classed with the Beulā songs of Mankara and Nārāyaṇadeva, Uṣā-pariṇaya and Rukmini-haraṇa of Pīṭāmbara Dāsa, etc.

Ananta Kandali.—Durgābara is followed by Ananta Kandali, a contemporary and follower of Śańkaradeva. Ananta Kandali took the work of Mādhava Kandali before him and amply borrowed from him verses and expressions, condensed somewhere and elaborated elsewhere. What speciality he claims is his incorporation of the Bhāgavati element into the epic. He has expressively said:

Mādhava Kandali biracilā Rāmāyaņa Tāka śuni āmāra kautuka kare mana Rāmara sāmānya santa kathā yathāvata Bhajanīya guņa yata nabhailā vekata Eteke yatan karo bhakatira pade Nubulibā nindā sadā śunā sabhāsade Sākṣāte Parama Brahma jānibā Šrī Rama

"Mādhava Kandali wrote the Rāmāyaṇa. Hearing his work I aspire. He wrote the simple facts of Rāma but the devotional aspect was not made explicit. So I make the attempt for the sake of devotion and I entreat that the audience might not take offence with me. You should know Rāma to be the Absolute Brahman himself."

It has been stated above that Sankaradeva and Madhayadeva supplemented to the Rāmāyaṇa of Mādhava Kandali by contributing the Uttarā and the Adi Kandas. But they were both preceded by Ananta Kandali in the writing of the Rāmāyana. There is a reference in the Katha-gurucarita of the Barpeta Satra regarding this. The reference is very significant. It is stated that Mādhava Kandali once appeared before Sankaradeva in a dream and entreated him to retain his name in the Rāmāyaṇa, as it was seen that Ananta Kandali was trying to dispense with his name from his Rāmāyana. Śrī Śankara having such an experience retained the Rāmāyana of Mādhava Kandali as it was and supplemented the two cantoes, the Adi and the Uttara. They further added the Bhanitas at the end of the chapters in the style of the works of the Vaisnava period. Originally there were no verses enjoining upon people to turn to Hari and take his name. Mādhava Kandali ended his chapters with the words "Subha," simply.

To Ananta Kandali as to his Guru Śrī Śankaradeva, Rāma was no other than Kṛṣṇa himself in another form, and by supplementing the devotional aspect to the epic he turned it to a religious scripture fitting to the contemporary movement of which he was a distinguished votary. In many places he has distinctly referred to his speciality. In one place he has said:—

Rāmāyaṇa kathā pade nibandhilo Bhāgavatacarccā kari Hari kathā vine durghora kalita Tārite keho napāri.

"I have narrated the facts of the Rāmāyaṇa in verse by discussing the Bhāgavata. In the dark age of Kali no one can attain liberation without Hari."

222 ASPECTS OF EARLY ASSAMESE LITERATURE

Ananta Kandali describes Rāma as God and the subjects as his devotees. On the occasion of Rāma's leaving for forest he says to Sītā:—

Bharata haibeka rajā pālibeka save prajā
Tāto mõr kicho cintā nāi.
Etekese mora śoka tejilo bhakata loka
Sumarante prāna phuti yāi
Ehena Ayodhyāpurī āra yata nara nārī
Save mora param bhakata

"Bharata will be king and rule over the subjects. But I have no thought over that. The cause of my sorrow is this that I have forsaken the devotees. This thought rends my heart. The men and women of the whole of Ayodhya are my devotees."

The above tone is explicit everywhere. The poet compares the palace of Rāma as the temple of Rāma equalling it with Vaikunṭḥa, unlike Mādhava Kandali who compares it with Kailāsa.

That the people of the time was aspiring after knowledge and were discontent with the scholars for not clearly explaining things to them are evident from some verses of the Rāmāyaṇa. He says:—

Pandite bhāndiba buli nakaribā ros Āmi punu bhāngiloho panditar dos.

"Do no longer resent by saying that the scholars will cheat you. I have removed the faults of the scholars."

Again—Ślokara arthaka prākṛte nubuje
Paṇḍite nakave yāci
Etekese Rāmakathā biracilo Bhakatira tattva bāci.

"The illiterate do not understand the words of the slokas and the scholars also do not explain them at their own initiative and so I have written the story of Rāma by expounding the truths of the Bhakti cult."

The poet gives his own particulars in the following manner:-

"Hājo is a sacred place and it is the best place in Kāmarūpa. On the top of the Maņikūṭa hill there is Hayagrīva, the lord of the gods. By its side flows the Brahmaputra. There is a sacred kunda there known as Apunarbhava, an ablution in which destroys a second birth. Deva Gangādhara in the form of Gokarna is shining there... Over the hill there is Hara Kāmeśwara in the form of the Linga and there are also Kedāra and Kamala in the forms of the Linga."

"In such a holy place there was Ratna Pāṭhaka, a Brahman who was a servant of Viṣṇu. He propagated the Bhāgavata there holding a Satra. There was born a son to him named Haricarana. He was subsequently known as Ananta Kandali when good days dawned upon him. This humble self now composes the verse of the Rāmāyana by incorporating the Bhāgavata as salvation is not possible in the Kali age without Hari" (Ayodhyā-kāṇḍa).

"Ratna Pățhaka bent on the feet of the Brāhmans and Vișnu resided there for sometime. He always read the Bhāgavata and the saintly people always heard him. People were pleased with his cuckoo-like voice" (Kişkindhyā-kānda).

He has other references in the portion of the Bhāgavata, X, done by him and in the Vrtrāsura-vadha (Bhāgavata, IV).

In the Xth Canto Bhāgavata he has said that he was known also as Candra Bhāratī, Ananta Kandali and as Bhāgavata Ācāryya.

On a slab of stone on a hillock to the direct north of Umananda at North Gauhati there is a record as follows:—

> Šite taraņi-tāpena grīsme lauhitya-vāyunā Sukhado'khila-lokānām mandapas-Candra-Bhārateh.

"This is the camp (mandapa) of Candra Bhāratī which for its sunrays in winter and the air of the Brahmaputra in summer, is pleasant to all people."

Śrī Rāma Kīrtana is another recension of the Rāmāyaṇa in a different style. This was the work of Ananta Thākura Ātā also known as Kāyastha Hṛdayānanda belonging to the fourth generation from Śaṅkaradeva. It was he who had established the Kālaśilā Satra at Nowgong. He wrote Rāma Kīrtana in 1574 Śaka,

In the body of the work he has written: -

Yasa Candra Khân ye Bhūyā āchilā prakhyāta bara Sadāya dharmata yāra citta

224 ASPECTS OF EARLY ASSAMESE LITERATURE

Tāhāna kanistha bhāi Sukavi ye giri nāme Khyati tāna putra Yadu hai. Sankarara bhātṛ-pautrī nāme Viṣnupriyā śāntī Bihāilanta Yadu śubhānay Tāna garbhe bhailo jāta nuhikoho āmi khyāta. Parama mūrukha mūḍhamati"

"There was the great and virtuous Bhūyā, Yaśa Candra Khān. His youngest brother Sukavi-giri had a son named Yadu. This Yadu married the chaste girl Viṣṇupriyā, daughter of Śaṅkara's brother. I am born of her but have no fame. I am a dullard."

He says in another place: — Kāyastha Hṛdayānande kaya Suniyoka sabhāṣada caya.

"Please hear, O! audience. Hṛdayānanda says this: Rāma-Kīrtana is written in the style of Śaṅkaradeva's Śrī Kṛṣṇa Kīrtana and takes the facts from Rāmāyaṇa Candrikā, a condensed Sanskrit Rāmāyaṇa written by the Assamese scholar Kalāpacandra." The poet writes:—

> Sāta kāṇḍa Rāmāyaṇa Vālmīkira kṛta Tāra sāra uddhārilā kariyā vivṛta Rāmāyaṇa Candrikā hailanta tāra nāma Kalāp ye dvija candra mahanta upāma Kīrtanar chande birachilo pada sāra Śrī Rāma Kīrtana nāma bujibā ihāra

"Kalāpa Candra Dvija by taking the essence of the Rāmāyaṇa of Vālmīki has written Rāmāyaṇa Candrikā. I have made verses from it after the style of Kīrtana." The poet means the Kīrtana of Śrī Śankaradeva. He himself has written:—

Jaya jaya Śrīmanta Śankara pūrnakāma Kīrtanara chande biracilā guņa nāma

"Hail to Śrīmanta Śaṅkara the perfect in himself. He wrote the virtues and names (of Kṛṣṇa) in verses of Kīrtana".

The poet was a follower of Sankaradeva and accepted Rāma as none other than Kṛṣṇa himself and made his work fit for daily chanting. In the reference to the date of composition the poet gives Aśva, Muni, Vāṇa, Candra Saka which comes to 1574 Saka.

The prose Rāmāyaṇa

The prose Rāmāyaṇa or Kathā Rāmāyaṇa was written about the latter half of 16th century (Śaka era) by Raghunātha Mahanta, a Satrādhikara of the Daiyāng Sattra. The author was fifth in descent from Śatānanda, a contemporary and disciple of Śrī Śańkaradeva. This author also wrote two other poetical works—Śatruñjaya and Adbhuta Rāmāyaṇa. In Adbhuta Rāmāyaṇa the poet writes:—

Kṛṣṇara kinkara Barbhakta vamśe jāta Alpamati Raghunātha nāmata bikhyāta

"I am born in the family of Barkhakta, servant of Kṛṣṇa and am known as Raghunātha." Satānanda was known as Barbhakta as is learnt from the caritaputhis. In Satruñjaya the poet says that he wrote in the saka era 1658. Thus it may be surmised that Kathā Rāmāyaṇa might have been written sometime earlier or later than the Satruñjaya. The actual date of the work has not yet been traced as the complete work has not been discovered as yet. Late Hemchandra Goswami collected the original manuscript of this work from one Bhimkānta Mahanta of Golāghāt. In the Descriptive Catalogue of Assamese Manuscripts he has stated that Raghunātha was the son of Kṛṣṇanātha and grandson of Harikṛṣṇa and flourished in the fifth generation from Sankaradeva. He was the Satrādhikāra of the Daiyāng-sattra in the Golaghat Sub-division on the bank of the Daiyāng river. An annotated edition of this work has been prepared by Gauhati University for publication.

This work is a valuable treasure of Assamese prose literature, and it contains the facts of the Rāmāyaṇa in a concise form. At the end of each chapter the poet has mentioned the name of the Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa. In the style of the work there is a distinct trace of influence of the Aṅkīyā-nāṭa and the works of Bhaṭṭadeva.

The Rāmāyaņa in Drama

It was Śrī Śankaradeva who first dramatized the facts of the Rāmāyaṇa in his Sītā Svayambāra or Rāma Vijaya Nāṭ. Mādhavadeva is also said to have written a drama known as Rāma Bhāwanā. There is a reference to it in the old biographical works. It is also stated that the work was not preserved after the first performance as it was difficult for various reasons to arrange performances (See Kathāgurucarita edited by U. C. Lekharu).

226 ASPECTS OF EARLY ASSAMESE LITERATURE

Another drama, Sītār Pātāla-Praveša, was written by Ananta Kandali, Thus the facts of the Rāmāyana were made familiar even to lay-men.

Some other Minor and Stray Works

There are some minor and stray works built upon folklore and also the facts of the $R\bar{a}m\bar{a}yana$ by poets. These are very popular among mass people but are not literal transactions from any original Sanskrit works. There are such works extant in Bengali as well. Dr. Dinesh Chandra Sen is of opinion that the stories of these works might have arisen towards the 12th and the 13th centuries as most of these dwell on the mights of Tantra and Yoga. These later on were infused with Vaisnava traits and made instrumental in the propagation of the Vaisnava faith. The same may be said about the Assamese works. Details of some such works are given below.

In Satruñjaya are described the powers and the victories of Bāli. In Bāli's expedition of conquering the directions even Narakāsura of Kāmapītha had to take side. Narakāsura made his way through the path of Yoga and reached the place of the monkey king Malayaja with his soldiers. After the description of the Yogapatha the poet has said: —

"O audience, hear this rare tale. Its name is Satrunjaya and it is the work of Raghunātha Das. I have said something of the past and something of the future from what Vālmīki said to Bharadvāja while narrating about incarnation I have introduced the tale of Satrunjaya. Wise men should pardon me as it is customary that the poets incorporate various rasas in kāvyas. I have incorporated the rasas here from various Sāstras."

The Sanskrit Adbhutarāmāyana tells the story of the killing of the hundred-headed Rāvana by Sītā. But this Assamese version contains a different story which is as follows:

Sītā after she had descended to the nether regions became impatient of not seeing Lava and Kuśa and sent Vāsuki to take them to her by some means. Vāsuki came in the form of a Brāhman and under the pretext of training them in war instruments took them away. On the way the Brahman knew from them everything regarding them and the descent of their mother Sītā. The Brāhman then related to them that he had met Vrateswarī Devī wife of Rāma in the city of Vidyā-Vilāsinī. They then desired to see her. Sītā's joy knew no bounds to have her sons before her.

It was later known from Brahmā where Lava and Kuśa were taken. Hanumanta, who was an adept in yogic performance was sent for bringing back the brothers. Hanumanta entered the nether world and defeating the Nāgas in a fight had interview with Lava and Kuśa and also Sītā and persuaded the princes to come back. He also succeeded in getting Sītā's consent to come to Rēma only once. Hanumanta reached Rāma's place and Sītā also along with the two sons appeared from within the earth in a celestial throne. Rāma's pangs of separation was minimized and Sītā again entered the nether world promising to come and bow down before Rāma every day after the daily performances were over.

Here ends the story. It is said to have been related to Yudhişthira by Mārkaṇḍeya.

Mahirāvaņa Vadha,—This work was written by Śrī Candra Bhārati which is another name of Ananta Kandali.

The story is that Rāvaṇa sought for help from his brother Mahirāvaṇa of the nether region, in his war with Rāma. Mahirāvaṇa by his spell of sleep took away Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa and captivated them for making sacrifice of them before the goddess Caṇḍi. Hanumanta by his yogic skill smashed the goddess Caṇḍi, killed Mahirāvaṇa and also Garbhāsura born of Mahirāvaṇa, and took back Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa.

Gaṇaka Caritra.—This is a small work written by one Dhanañjaya.

The story here is that Rāvaṇa made a device for winning Sītā by presenting before her in the Aśoka forest illusory Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa. He went to the place in a grand procession and was sure of success. Because, he would make the illusory Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa entreat Sītā to surrender to Rāvaṇa. In the meantime Hanumanta entered Lankā in the form of an astrologer and frustrated the purpose of the demon by bearing strong evidence of the unchastity of his wife Mandodarī and raising his fury thereby.

ASSAMESE VERSIONS OF THE MAHABHARATA

By

U. C. LEKHARU

Kṛṣṇ Dvaipāyana Vyāsa, the original author of the Mahā-bhārata taught the epic to five disciples—Vaiśampāyana, Suka, Jaimini, Paila and Sumantu. Vaiśampāyana repeated it at the serpent sacrifice of Janamejaya. Sūta Ugraśravā or Sauti (son of Lomahar-ṣaṇā Sūta) heard it recited there. Sūta then sang it in the twelve-year sacrifice of Saunaka in the Naimiṣāraṇya. Thus the Māhā-bhārata came to have three versions. The other disciples also were believed to have developed the theme of the Māhābhārata in their way. But the extant second version is the Aśvamedha-parva of Jaimini.

For a comparative study of the Assamese Mahābhārata we give below from Sabdakalpadruma, the parvās, chapters, and the numbers of Slokas in the original Sanskrit text.

Parvas	Anuparvas	Chapters	Ślokas
	19	227	8984
Adi	9	78	2511
Sabhā	16	269	11664
Āraņyaka or Vana	4	76	2050
Virāţa	11	186	6628
Udyoga	5	117	5884
Bhīşma		170	9909
Drona	8	69	4964
Karna	4	59	3220
Salya	9	18	870
Sauptika	3 5 4 1 2 3 1	27	775
Strī	1	339	14732
Śānti	1	146	8000
Anuśāsana	2	103	3320
Aśvamedha	2	42	1506
Āśramavāsa	1	8	300
Mausala	i	3	320
Mahāprasthānika	î	5	200
Svargārohana Harivamsa:
Āścarya	1 1	244	12000
Bhavişya	1	112	3448

Attempts at rendering the Mahābhārata into Assamese verse were made very early in the 13th century, and till the days of Sankaradeva we find traces of three Mahābhārata poets. From what has been found till to-day it may be surmised that some solitary episodes or parvans only were done into Assamese during the period. Thus, Harivara Vipra's Vabrubāhar Yuddha of the Aśvamedha-parva, the Jayadratha-vadha of the Droṇa-parva of Kaviratna Sarasvatī and Sātyaki-Praveśa of the Droṇa-Parva in the name of Rudra Kandali are the only productions left to us till to-day. It is not that no other portions were done besides those mentioned. From what, for instance, Kaviratna Sarasvatī has stated in his Jayadrathavadha we know that the poet had already versified the Sakuntalā episode, and the character of Yajāti of the Ādiparva and then took to composing the killing of Jayadratha.

The poets in those days were patronized by the kings and it is from the eulogies made by the poets of the kings that the times of the works and the poets can be traced. Thus Harivara Vipra in his Vabrubāhar Yuddha has said that he has composed his work during the reign of King Durlabhanārāyaṇa, the great king of Kamatāpura. A translation of the lines is given below:

"Hail to King Durlabhanārāyaṇa, the great hero of Kamatāpur. May he live thousands of years and happily, with his sons and friends, rule over his kingdom. Living in his kingdom the Brahman Harivara, worshipping the feet of Gaurī has expressed in verse, the Aśvamedha Parva which is appreciated by the saintly people." Durlabhanārāyaṇa ruled towards the end of the thirteenth century.¹

Kaviratna Sarasvatī has stated that he composed his Jaya-dratha-vadha in the reign of King Indranārāyaṇa, son of Durlabha-nārāyaṇa. From his writings it is known that the king was a worshipper of Sadāśiva. The poet says that in the village of Choṭaśilā (in Barpetā subdivision) was the well-known Paṇḍita chief, Cakra-pāṇi Śikdār, whom King Durlabhanārāyaṇa had praised again and again. He died and there was sorrow everywhere. His son Kaviratna Sarasvatī composed the verses of the Jayadratha-Vadha.

Rudra Kandali in his Satyaki-praveśa has in the same manner referred to King Tāmradhvaja and has said:

"The high soul Tamradhvaja and his brother, though young, are virtuous like old men. They are devotees of both Visnu and ^{1.} Gait, A History of Assam, p. 81.

Mahāmāyā and they protect the subjects like their own sons. They bear love to each other like Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa. May they live a thousand years with their friends."

Thus the poet may be taken to have flourished during the reign of the Kachārī king Tāmradhvaja, who ruled in the beginning of the 14th century.

These poets composed verses on popular themes of the Mahābhārata to fit to the use of the Ojā-pālis, who sang these at public gatherings and on festive occasions. In fact the Rāmāyaṇa, the Mahābhārata and the subject of Beulā were in those days the main sources of knowledge and enjoyment to the mass. The poets took the subjects from the original Sanskrit works and narrated them generally very freely in tune with the folk-songs, and the national traits with all their details found full expression in them.

The Vabrubāhar Yuddha taken from Jaimini's Aśvamedha Parva, is finished in 605 verses of pada, jhumuri, chabi and dulari metres. The description of the palace of Maṇipura is very elaborate and is simply a magnified form of a typical Assamese house, and it shows the artistic tastes of the people. The description of the fight is lively and those of sorrow are very touching. The figures of speech, idioms and phrases are homely, colloquial and aptly used.

The story of Vabrubāhar Yuddha: Yudhisthira's sacrificial horse followed by Arjuna was captured by Vabrubāha, the king of Maṇipura. Vabrubāhana then had known from his mother Citranagadā that Arjuna was his father. He then went to Arjuna to return the horse, but Arjuna did not only disclaim any relationship but questioned the chastity of his mother and chastised Vabrubāhana for his cowardice. Then Vabrubāhana fought with Arjuna and killed him. Śrī Kṛṣṇa appeared in the field, restored Arjuna to life and related to Arjuna that Vabrubāhana was his son through Chitrangadā. Arjuna then remembered everything and embraced Vabrubāhana as his most worthy son.

Along with other merits, the theme in which the father and the son are opposite parties in a war has made the work very popular even to this day.

Kaviratna Sarasvati's description of the fight in Jayadratha-Vadha is very expressive. The selection of words and the metre bearing them bring to the mind's eye the terrible state of the war.

It was in the Vaisnavite period at the initiative and patronage of king Naranārāyana (1540-1585 A.D.) and at the inspiration from Sankaradeva that the whole of the Mahābhārata was taken up for translation into Assamese verse. The Koc king Naranarāyaņa, the great patron of learning specially engaged Rāma Sarasvati, a follower of Śańkaradeva for his great work. During the reign and at the patronage of this king, Assamese literature and learning grew abundantly and to a high extent. From the descriptions of the poets on the generosity of this king one is naturally reminded of the great king Bhoja of antiquity. Naranārāyaņa and his brother and general Sukladhvaja bountifully gave money and other rewards to those who would offer any work on the Mahābhārata. The king would sit listening to the readings of the scriptures, the newly composed verses and would take active part himself in the various scriptural discussions. It was in his court that the ekasaran nama dharma of Śrī Śankaradeva was established in the long-drawn controversy between Sankaradeva and those who opposed him. Some works of extraordinary merit even from the pen of Sankaradeva and Madhavadeva came at the wish either of this king or his brother. The Gunamala of Sankaradeva which is a very condensed version of Bhagavata was composed overnight when once the king wished to hear the Bhagavata from any one in his court at one sitting. In very many places of the Mahābhārata and other works the poets have sung his praises. We give below some translations of the praises from the Mahabharata:

"Hail to the unequalled king Naranārāyaṇa, who is busy day and night with the search for Śāstras on religion, morals, the Purāṇas and the Bhārata. It is he who has brought to his court all the Paṇḍits in Gauḍa and Kāmarūpa and have placed them in possession of Śāstras. There in his court the wise men expound the Śāstras every day. I have also been brought here. At the injunction of the king I have composed the verses in great joy" (Verses 7-9 of the Ādi-Vanaparva).

"He is patient, forgiving, bountiful, and highly saintly and is ever full of reverence to Viṣṇu and the Vaiṣṇavas. He worships at the feet of Mādhava in every manner. Such a king ordered me" (Verses 354-356, Ādi-Vanaparva).

"I pay my respects to Naranārāyaṇa, the son of Viśvasimha, versed in all Śāstras and whose glory is sung by the kings. His city is on the river Swarṇakoṣa and it is wide and long and is beautiful like the place of Indra. In his kingdom there are nine lakhs of subjects excluding the Brāhmaṇas, Vaiṣṇavas and beggars.

He punishes the thieves, the wicked and the dacoits. He is overjoyed to hear the Jaya-kāvya, the Mahāpurāṇas and places the Bhārata very high in his esteem. In the interior of his court he incessantly hears the rare Bhārata by offering money, clothings and apparels. This king has subdued many kings and the kings of Jayantā, Kirāta, Bhāṭa, Magadha, Mailaka pay him tributes. He has bestowed on me wealth to my heart's content and having his words in mind I have composed these verses" (Adi Vanaparva, verses 827-833).

"He commanded me thus:—'You compose the Mahābhārata in Assamese verse. I have given you all the commentaries and explanations that are in my court library and you take all to your place.' Thus the king in cart-loads have sent all the books to my place. He has given me sufficient money, clothing and apparels and also servants and maid-servants, and I have composed the verses at his words" ('Puṣpaharana' portion of the Vana Parva, 839-842).

"My parents called me Anirudha, Sukladhvaja gave the name of Kavicandra, the king bestowed on me the name of Rāma Sarasvatī and asked me to compose the Mahābhārata, those ṛṣi-like poets like Kaṁsāri also have composed verses from this epic. These poets gave me hints that they would also compose verses. I have done some portions and they also have done in portions" (Vanaparva, 'Puspaharana', vv. 1424-25).

"Hail to king Naranārāyaṇa versed in all the Śāstras, who takes the greatest delight in hearing the Bhārata. Day and night he hears the Bhārata. If anybody offers him any book on the Bhārata he becomes very glad and gives to one's heart's content money and apparels. He has gone to the other world but his good name survives and he is praised by the worthy. I composed verses very happily in his kingdom... There was Śrīmanta Śankara, who was the greatest of Vaiṣṇavas in the whole of Jambūdvīpa. Sukladhvaja, the brother of the king accepted him as his religious guru and would hear the Bhāgavata. He also listened to the Bhārata" (Baghāsura-vadha).

"Śrīmanta Śankara is God in man's form. The Brāhmans being jealous of him spoke against him before the king... But Naranārā-yaṇa, the greatest of the kings was a saint and he sent for me and asked me to compose verses of the Bhārata. At his words I have composed twenty-four thousand verses. The original work of Vyāsa contains thirty-thousand ślokas (End of Kulācalavadha).

Rāma Sarasvatī has stated :-

"Hail to Sukladhvaja, the brother of the king, and also chief among the pundits whose mind was dipped into the Bhāgavata religion by Śrīmanta Śańkara. In his kingdom I write these verses. I bow down at the feet of Mukundadeva, the unequalled in virtues, who gave the names of Bhāratacandra and Kavicandra. Victorious be Naranārāyaṇa in the world who is ever eager to hear the Bhārata" (Vijaya-vanaparva, vv. 3319-3321).

"At the word of such a king (Naranārāyaṇa) I have composed the Vanaparva verses" (v. 4820).

Engaged by Naranārāyaṇa, Rāma Sarasvatī took up the work. Some other poets also volunteered their services and assisted Rāma Sarasvatī in versification. This is evidenced by the poet's own acknowledgment, translation of which is given above. Whatever that might be, Rāma Sarasvatī could not finish the work during the life time of Naranārāyaṇa but continued to work till the days of Dharmanārāyaṇa, king of Darrang. Subsequently other poets also extended their hands to versifying the portions left unfinished by the forerunners. We have given in the following pages the names and the works of all the Mahābhārata poets.

Being a devout follower of Śańkaradeva Rāma Sarasvatī while fulfilling the wish of the king made his Mahabharata subservient to the propagation of the Bhagavata religion as was preached by his great preceptor. The stories of the Mahābhārata like those of the Rāmāyana naturally attract people, these being repositories of all knowledge and ideals and representatives of Indian culture. The whole of the Mahabharata and especially the Vanaparva afforded ample scope for the poet to preach the Vaisnava tenetsto show the glory of Lord Krsna and the triumph of virtue over vice. The Vanaparva of the Assamese Mahābhārata has been made very voluminous. This parva is also known as Vaisnavaparva. and the Assamese people regard the Mahabharata as a religious scripture in no sense inferior to the great Bhagavata. The Vaisnava element in the Mahābhārata had not been a new thing but it had crept in even into the original composition of Kṛṣṇa Dwaipāyana Vyāsa. Rāma Sarasvatī made it still more pronounced. The stories and the truth behind them so long unknown to the mass became not only popular but become their heart's most prized treasure. The works of the co-workers and followers of Rāma Sarasvati all bore the same tone and spirit. Further specialities of the Assamese Mahābhārata is that it contains some sub-parvas, and Upa-parvas some of which are very voluminous, and which are not found in the works of any other provincial languages. The poet traces their sources to the original work of Vyāsa and the commentaries accompanying it. No research has however been made so far to find out the original Sanskrit work on which the poets built their edifices and the whole field of Sanskrit manuscripts in Assam remains almost unexplored,

We give below some details of the various parvas of the Assamese Mahābhārata:—

Ādi Parva.—The poet retells this parva in 2036 verses. Here he writes in the name of Aniruddha or Dvija Aniruddha, and does not refer to the king who employed him. This parva has not yet been published but remains in manuscript. It may be reminded that some episodes only of this parva were rendered into Assamese verses in the early period by Kaviratna Sarasvatī in the days of king Indranārāyaṇa, son of Durlabhanārāyaṇa of Kamatā. The poet has made very explicit the mission of the propagation of the Vaiṣṇava faith that remains in the background of the work. Aniruddha is another name of Rāma Sarasvatī.

Here is the description of the meeting of Parāśara with Satyavatī, the birth of the Pāṇdavas and the Kauravas, the destruction of the Khāṇḍava forest and the fight of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna with Indra. Pāncālī-vivāha, a work in 860 couplets, containing the episode of Draupadī's birth and marriage, springs from the hands of Rāma Sarasvatī, who also gives his name as Bhārata Bhūṣaṇa.

Sabhā Parva.—This parva contains 1070 verses and the poet's name appears as Dvija Aniruddha as in Adi Parva. The poet's own son Gopīnātha also assisted him with the verses from 812-1028. The work describes the Rājasūya Yajña of Yudhişthira and Yudhişthira's play of dice with the Kauravas including Sakuni.

Another poet Sista Bhattācāryya rendered the Sisupālavadha of Sabhā Parva in a very homely style. In Siyāl Gosāi another work of the poet, he says that he belonged to the Sūryya Vipra class and had his residence at Chaparā in the Darrang district. This work is believed to have been written at about 1616 A.D.

Vana Parva.-This parva contains-Adi Vanaparva, Puṣpaharaṇa Parva (written with Gopīnatha), Maṇicandra Ghoṣa Parva, Vijaya Parva—all in 5441 verses. Tīrtha-yātrā-parva, Sindhurā Parva or Sindhu-yātrā-parva—in 1142 verses (written during the days of Dharmanārāyaṇa).

The upa-parvas related to this parva are the following: -

Kulācalavadha (in 1925 verses)

Baghāsuravadha (in 3900 verses after the death of Naranārāyaṇa)

Khatāsuravadha (in 182 verses)

Aśvakarna-yuddha

Jatāsuravadha

Janghāsuravadha

Bhojakatavadha.

The other poets who composed verses on the Vanaparva are the following:—

Kamsāri.—a contemporary of Rāma Sarasvatī. He wrote Kirāta Parva—a subparva. Kamsāri finishes the work in seven hundred and twenty-five verses. The subject-matter of the parva consists of Arjuna's mastering the war instruments in heaven under Indra, his escape from the enchantment of Urvaśī, killing of Nibāta Kavaca and Paulama, pleasing Śańkara in fight and attaining the Pāśupata from him, and his coming back to his brothers.

Sāgara Khari.—This poet was a resident of Śilā (Barpeta) as is known from the last verse of his work.

His work is Kūrmawali-vadha and it contains 366 verses. In verse 364 he states that he has made verses of the Kūrmathaparva. The story is as follows:—

After the Pāṇḍavas were sent to exile the Kauravas, in order to proclaim their prowess made arrangement for a horse sacrifice. A new town was established for the purpose, the house for holding the sacrifice was built and then were sent horses to the four quarters. Karṇa was sent to the west, Droṇa to the east, Duḥśāsana to the north, and Bhīṣma to the south as guards of the sacrificial horses. The horse of Duḥśāsana entered the kingdom of Kūrmawali. The king ordered Kālabhadra to capture the horse and made arrangements for war. Duḥśāsana was also taken a prisoner in the war. Duryodhana and Bhīṣma and all went there and reached the place in twelve days.

The fight ensued. Jayadratha and Karna bound Kālabhadra with Nāgapāśa. Kūrmawalī came and encountered Duryodhana. Duryodhana was flown off to Hastināpura. Then approached Bhīṣma who killed Kūrmawalī. Kālabhadra was released. The five-year old son of Kūrmawalī was made king. The widowed queen died ascending the funeral pyre of her husband.

It will be interesting to know the contents of the upa-parvas joined to the Vana Parva. The poet claims, as it has been stated above, that he had the sources of these in the Sanskrit works of Vvāsa, which had the commentaries with them. He got these from the court library of King Naranārāyana. The poet also says that he had inserted the inner truths behind the facts and incidents, and also things from Hamsa-kālcī in places. By the inner truths the poet means the Bhagavata teachings. In fact, the poet after describing the facts and incidents dwells in ecstasy on the glory of lord Kṛṣṇa. He writes verse after verse in singing the lilacaritra of Krsna, the ways of the Vaisnavas and the cult of bhakti. He sings further the praises of Sankaradeva who established Vaisnavism in Assam, Kāmarūpa and Koc Behār and King Naranārāvana and Sukladhvaja for their reverence for the sacrifices for Sankaradeva and for patronising the cause of learning and the Bhagavata religion. It will not be possible in this short space, to show the literary and other beauties that abound in the works mentioned, but we give below only the broad outlines of the stories in the various upa-parvas.

The Story of Kulacala-Vadha.-The Pandavas are at the hermitage of sage Galwava. They hear from the sage that Dhumrāksa born of Karnadatta of Kāśi by virtue of a sacrifice to Svetamādhava got a son who received the name Kulācala from Agasti. The sage also said that his face would be like that of a goat and his body would be of a man. This Kulācala turns a tyrant and cause of death. Arjuna and Bhima want to see him. They start north and after some months reach the place the Kiśora forest by the bank of the Damaghosa. There live the sage Svetaketu near Gandharagiri, One day Bhīma and Ariuna were seen by a demon friend of Kulacala. The demon wants to take the two Pandavas as food for Kulacala. Then ensues a terrible fight. Bhīma kills the demon along with his ten followers. Another day other four demons see Nakula and Sahadeva and from conversation with them know them to be the brothers of those two men who killed the ten demons some days back. In fear they hasten to Kulācala and informs him of everything. Kulācala first sends his attendants who attack the Pāndavas at their place of rest. A fight ensues. The commander of the demons dies. Two others also die. Then come Kürmaräta. He also having been defeated, Kulācala personally comes to the field and he is also ultimately killed.

This story is said to have been taken from Aśvamedha Parva of Jaimini Bhārāta.

At the end of this Parva Rāma Saravatī has said—"The luminous Śaṅkara was God himself in man's form. But the Brāhmanas grew envious and spoke to the king against him The Brāhmanas would not bear Śaṅkara fearing that their source of income and honour would be destroyed. But Naranārāyana was such a monarch that he brought me and enjoined upon me the task of rendering the Bhārata into Assamese verse. At his word I have composed twentyfour thousand ślokas so far. The original ślokas of Vyāsa were thirty thousand in number." The poet ends with the name Bhārata Bhuṣana at the end.

He also writes—Dvaipāyana has mixed Jāmala-Samhitā and Hamsa-Kākī.

The story of Baghāsura-Vadha.-The Pāndavas after leaving the Bhavarnava forest starts to see the sage Agasti in the Taraga forest. They first reach the place of Astika and then the Sriphala forest and bathe in the Bindu-tirtha. Yudhisthira worships Kṛṣṇa and Gaurinātha and Draupadī worships Gaurī. Gaurī appears before Draupadi and gives a dish to her by virtue of which Draupadī would ever have good clothings and ornaments. She further gives the boon that Draupadi would never be a widow. The Pandavas then reach Südrasthana and the hermitage of Galwava. This sage gives them the direction of Agasti's place. After that they find the Baluka mountain where Sūryya in the form of a Kirāta appears before them and gives hints of the path. Now they reach Taraga forest, the Kāśi river, and then the mountain of Rsabha. There Bhīma and Arjuna, while out on hunting excursion, comes upon Campavati, a beautiful place in the interior of a mountain guarded by two Asuras. They kill the Asuras and the citizens receive the heroes in great honour and request them to kill Māyāvanta, who have been oppressing them. They kill the Asura and come back. All the brothers and Draupadī then leave the place, go through Śrikṣetra, Nandana Parvata, and reach Agasti in the Malaya mountain. They there learn that Baghāsura, son of Rākṣasī Āsārikā through sage Birinchi, having had a boon from Hara has been making havoe all round. He has his place very high in the Vaiduryya mountain. They then make their way to kill the great demon. First they take recourse to the country of Sallan and the Vasanta mountain. They then bathe in the holy waters of the Bindusara. They are attacked by a very big lion. The five brothers kill the lion. Draupadī invokes Kṛṣṇa and through his instruction kills the lion with her bangle. The lion then assumes a celestial form and pays homage to the band saying that he is delivered of a curse of sage Angirasa. The lion is none but Upendra Somadatta, a gandharva. The Pāṇdavas were, it may be added, brought back to life by Kṛṣṇa.

The batch reach the Brahmahrada, see Parasurāma who bless them and give the Parasu axe to Arjuna. They then reach the Nandaka mountain, the Brahma-Kṣetra, and Brahma-sarovara. They see Satānanda, son of Gautama and the Ṣṣi satra at a distance of two praharas. At a distance of a prahara from there they camp. The Ṣṣis request them to kill the demon Baghāsura. They first meet the general Suraketu on a big cat and kill him in a terrible fight. Baghāsura knows of it and comes to fight. The gods give the Pāṇḍavas power, and Bhīma and Arjuna kills the great demon Baghāsura. Ultimately Bhīma kills him and Arjuna kills the demon Surajit who has been born of Mārīci Rākṣasī through sage Aṣṭāvakra, and having defeated Baghāsura in a fight became friends and lived together on the Vaidurya mountain.

The poet writes—"Says poet Sarasvatī, the servant of Mukunda: repeat the name of Rāma. Hail to Naranārāyaṇa who is loved by all and who is ever sympathetic to the poor. He protects the good, fulfils the wishes of the people and is like death to the wicked.

"Living in his kingdom I compose these verses in various short and long rhymes."

He again says, — "Here are the facts of the Mahāpurāṇa (?) and these are mixed with Bhāgavata."

The story of Khatāsura-Vadha of Rāma Sarasvati: — Janamejaya asks and Jaimini narrates the story:

Once Duryodhana went to the Gandharva forest and the Pāṇḍavas went in a different direction. Duryodhana resided there for some days. Yudhiṣṭhira consulting the brothers thought it wise to leave the place for Naimiṣāraṇya. They had the advice of the twentyeight thousand Rṣis who also followed them. They reached Naimiṣāraṇya and began to spend the days in listening to and discussing the life and works of Śrī-Kṛṣṇa. The four brothers of Yudhiṣṭhira would go in different directions and collect edibles. Draupadī would cook for all of them and also for the Rsis. Nine months passed in this way. One day when Draupadi was alone in their hut, Khatasura, a demon, saw her and enamoured of her beauty proposed to Draupadi to marry him. Seeing that Draupadi would not be an easy prey the demon showed his fury by pulling down the hut. Draupadi shouted for Yudhisthira for her safety. Yudhisthira heard the voice of Draupadi and hurried to the place. He knew what had happened and challenged the demon who was hiding beside a tree. Yudhişthira could not kill the demon even by showering arrows but the demon made Yudhisthira senseless and bound him. He then asked Draupadī for her consent. Then came Bhīma who also had the same plight as Yudhisthira. Thus all the five brothers lay senseless on the ground. Then the demon entreated Draupadi with sweet words to marry him. Draupadi began to rebuke the demon. He then grew furious and caught hold of the scarf of Draupadi. She wrenched herself free taking the name of Visnu and the demon fell on the ground. He stood up again and caught hold of her hand. Draupadi kicked him off. He then remembered that Brahma gave him the boon that he would never be defeated in the hands of any man but would be killed if he happened to fight with a woman. So he became more furious and to kill Draupadi he gave her a heavy slap. Draupadī was ever taking the name of Viṣṇu. She now grew very furious and was intent on killing the demon herself. She took out the bangle from her right wrist and in the name of Mādhava struck it against the Asura. His head instantly got severed. But feeling that her life without the husbands would be useless she wanted to die herself when Sri Kṛṣṇa appeared before her with all his charming beauty. Draupadī fell down at his feet and prayed to him to bring to life the Pandavas. Kṛṣṇa brought them to life and wishing them prosperity disappeared instantly. The Pandavas then repaired to the Rsis, told them everything and took leave of them to go to some other place. They showered benediction on them and Draupadi. The Pandavas then repaired to the Kalyana forest where they met the great serpent Ajagara whose questions they had to answer. The Khatāsura story ends in one hundred and twentythree verses,

The Story of Aśvakarna-Yuddha: — King Uśīnara, a devotee of Śiva had a daughter Hemā by an Apsarā. Hara gave a boon that Hemā would ever remain young. King of the nether region, Aśvakarna, also got a boon from Śiva that he would be killed by none but the Nāranārāyaṇa incarnation of Viṣṇu. Aśvakarna growing in power took all the sixteen sons of Uśīnara as servants and Hemā as an adopted daughter. Hemā was trained in all the black arts.

While the Pandavas were in exile, Bhīma and Arjuna once happened to come over to a well to drink water. To their great surprise they saw an exquisitely beautiful damsel in the well. She by her gestures entreated them to pick her up and said that any one who would pick her up would have her hand in marriage. She stated that a friend of hers had pushed her down to such a plight. They took compassion on her and Bhima tried first. As he seemed to fail Arjuna also helped him. But by magic power the damsel drew in and took them to the kingdom of Aśvakarna. There she related everything and said that they would be killed by the king. She further asked them their particulars, Bhīma was enraged at this but gave all details about them, and said that they would fear none. Bhima also scolded her. She then related the real sad story about her and told them that her name was Hemā. The brave brothers grew in anger and showed their chivalry by killing Aśvakarna. Hemâ pleased at heart took the heroes to Siva. At the injunction of Siva Arjuna married Hema and left her with Māvāvatī to be sent to him when the Pāndavas would be kings of Hastinapura.

Kirāta Parva: — Kirāta Parva is a sub-parva of Vana Parva. Kamsāri finishes this work in seven hundred and twentyfive verses. The subject-matter of this parva consists of Arjuna's mastering the war instruments in heaven under Indra, his escape from Urvašī, killing of Nibāta Kavaca, Kālakeyī and Paulama and his pleasing Sankara in fight and attaining the Pāsupata from him, and his coming back to the brothers.

Virāta Parva—(upto Kīcaka-vadha.) Rāma Sarasvatī wrote up to the Kīcaka-vadha in two thousand couplets.

The Pāṇḍavas after their twelve years' exile live in disguise at the court of Virāṭa Rāja according to the pledge at the play of dice. While living there, Kīcaka, the brother-in-law of the king had a strong fascination for Draupadī and ultimately attempted an indecent assault on her. Bhīma then very skilfully attacked Kīcaka and killed him. Here ends the work of Rama Sarasvatī.

Kamsāri, who is another poet of the Virāṭa Parva, writes a portion of the Dakṣina Gogrāha and the Uttara Gogrāha residing at the place of Śri Mādhavadeva.

To continue the story from where we leave above: The Kaurayas hearing of the death of Kicaka launched a war against Virāţa Rājā and tried to carry away his biggest herd of cattle. Virāţa Rājā defeated the Kauravas with the help of the Pāṇḍavas who lived in disguise. The Kauravas then recognised the Pāṇḍavas, but it was at the end of the period. The Kauravas returned to their place and Virāṭa Rājā knowing the Pāṇḍavas honoured them and gave his daughter Uttarā in marriage to Abhimanyu, the son of Arjuna.

In the beginning of Dakşina Gogrāha Kamsāri says—"I begin the versification of Virāṭa Parva and I wish it may have publicity among people....The poet Kamsāri narrates Dakṣina Gogrāha." Again in the beginning of Uttara Gogrāha he says, "The poet Kamsāri says Uttara Gogrāha." Towards the end he gives some particulars about himself, the translation of which is the following:—

'Śrī Yaśocandra Khān, the chief in Kāmarūpa, adores the feet of Gopāla. He is virtuous, magnanimous, grave and saint-like. The world sings his praises. He with the kinsmen protected the friends from the Kirātas who surrounds the moonlike Kāyastha garden. In the Kauth Kāyastha family was in fitness born Śrīmanta Madhava — may he ever be victorious. In his place (Satra) the Kāyastha Kamsāri has composed verses of the Bhārata.

"Śrīmanta Gābhur Khān is endowed with sons and brothers. Hearing his words Kāyastha Pitāmbara writes."

Again he writes — "The poet Kamsari writes in verse Virata Parva." In the portion of Daksina Gogrāha he writes,— "There was Daulat Khān the chief of the Bhūyās. He died uttering the name of Viṣṇu. His relative Śrīmanta Gābhur Khā, adoring the feet of Hari and with great care composed these verses."

Udyoga-Parva (in 1099 verses).—The work gives an account of the preparation for the war of Kurukşetra after the truce mission of Śrī Kṛṣṇa had failed. This parva was written during the time of Dharmanārāyaṇa. Here the poet says that Kavicūḍāmaṇi was a great Brāhman. His eldest son, who was virtuous was known as Kavicandra This Kavicandra was a brother of the poet.

The translation of the piece on the particulars of the poet which occurs in verses 184-185, is the following:—

"Kavicudāmaņi was a prominent Brāhman and his name glorified the family. His name still survives as he spent his days in worshipping Hari and Hara. His eldest son would worship Govinda and had dipped himself in Bhagavata. He was Kavicandra, brother to me. Through his favour, instructions, guidance and kindness, I have composed these verses."

The lamentations of Draupadi and her entreaties to Śri Kṛṣṇa before he went to the Kauravas with terms of peace, which occur in verses 171-187 in Lechari and Chabi metres have made the poet immortal. These portions have become so popular that almost every Assamese is acquainted with them and are very often sung both by males and females.

Another poet Dvija Rāmānanda wrote Udyoga-Parva at the request of king Śīva Simha and his consort Ambikā Devī.

Bhīsma-Parva (in 1587 verses).-Bhīsma-Parva begins with the account of the seven Varsas into which the earth is divided and gives the description of the Kuruksetra war for the first ten days.

This Parva was composed during the reign of Dharmanărāyana The poet says that every one, be he a subject or not, sings the praises of King Dharmanarayana who has attained equanimity in religion, who was named Dharmanārāyana by King Svarganārāyana, and that he has composed the Bhīsma-Parva residing at the kingdom of this king.

It is stated here that Karna did not take part in the fight in Bhīsma-Parva as Bhīsma called Karna Ardharathī. Here we get the names of Aniruddha, Vidyā Pañcanana and Rama Sarasvati.

Dharmanārāyana was the king of Darrang and he ruled from 1536 to 1559 saka, while king Naranārāyana of Koc Behār ruled from 1456 to 1506 Saka. In the verses 212 and followings the poet states:-

"In the great city of the Tantris, built by the god Martyadeva, there are produced various silk and other cloths fit for the gods. Near by flows the beautiful Manaha, an ablution in which removes all troubles In that city there was a great Brahman named Kanthabharana. His youngest son Vidya-Pañcanana, having adored the feet of Guru Gopala at heart has composed the character of Amba in the year 1570 Saka on the 14th day of the dark lunar part of the month of Śravana in the Aśvini Naksatra. The poet finishes the Gita portion in fiftyeight verses (158 to 215).

In the verses from 1350 to 1354, the poet has stated:-"Camariya is a village unparalled in Kamarupa. The lord of the village is Kavicuḍāmaṇi, the chief of the pundits. He is honoured by the mahantas for his qualities. In course of time he had two sons—Kavicandra and Rāma Sarasvatī. Kavicandra is known by his own virtues. He was engrossed in the study of the Śāstras. His brother Rāma Sarasvatī now pays homage to all saints."

In the Bhīsma Parva we get three names of the poet— Aniruddha, Vidyā-Pancānana and Rāma Sarasvatī.

We find another version of Bhīsma-Parva written by Rāma Miśra during the days of Jayadhvaja Simha (1654-1663). Rāma Miśra gives his genealogy as follows: —

Kalāpacandra Dvija of Nārāyaṇpur

Hari Bhāratī

Mādhava Kandali (Ahom ambassador—not the Rāmāyaṇa poet)

Rāma Miśra.

Hemchandra Goswami in The Descriptive Catalogue of Assamese Manuscripts (page 103) remarks that the work as recovered by him consists of 3554 couplets. The first series from 1 to 738 was written by Rāma Misra. The second series comes after this and runs from 1 to 1979 written by Rāma Sarasvatī. The third series commences at 1980 and ends in 2287 written by Rāma Miśra. The fourth series begins at 1 and ends in 529 written by Rāma Sarasvatī.

The Bhagavad-gītā.—The Bhagavad-gītā which forms a part of Bhīsma-Parva needs a special note. This work and Bhāgavata Purāna are the two main treatises on which Śrī Śańkaradeva founded his religion. The Gītā's main teaching was the Ekaśarana dharma (cf. māmekam śaranam vraja).

As it has been observed, Rāma Sarasvatī in his Bhīsma-Parva has finished the Gītā portion only in fifty-seven verses.

It was Bhattadeva, disciple of Dāmodaradeva, who wrote the Gītā in lucid prose mainly on the basis of the commentary of Śrīdhara Swāmī. This work along with the author's prose Bhāgavata are the monumental prose works of the sixteenth century.

The other work in verse is that of Govinda Miśra which is known as Kṛṣṇa Gītā. The poet being himself a devotee and a great scholar consulted all the great commentaries and followed that of Śrīdhara Śwāmī. This work is very popular.

To make the Gītā fit for daily recitation in a more popular manner Ratnākara Miśra wrote Gītā-kīrtana in the style of Kīrtana of Śankaradeva just as Ananta Ţhākura Ātā composed the Rāma Kīrtana from the Rāmāyana, Govinda Miśra was a contemporary of Bhattadeva. His genealogy as given in the Descriptive Catalogue of Assamese Manuscripts is as follows:—

Pītāmbara Cakravartī
| Bhaṭṭanārāyaṇa (a contemporary of Caṇḍīvara, the ancestor of Śaṅkaradeva)
| Rāma Miśra
| Kalāpacandra
| Tārāpati
| Govinda Miśra.

Drona-parva (4226 verses).—This parva was done jointly with Gopīnātha Pāṭhaka. Gopīnātha gives the names Dvija Gopīnatha, Gopīnatha Pāṭhaka and somewhere Kandali. Another poet named Dāmodara also composed some verses towards the end. This Dāmodara is also the author of Salya Parva (941 verses) and a disciple of Bhaṭṭadeva.

This work describes the Kurukṣetra war fought under the generalship of Droṇa, and also the death of Jayadratha, Ghaṭotkaca and Droṇa.

In Drona Parva verses 4012-4014 published by Laksheswar Sarmah in 1909 the poet Gopīnātha gives his particulars as follows:

"There is a village named Pātchaurā. It is also known as Silakonā. It was very beautiful and looked like two gold-chains. The master of the village a great man of the country was the Brāhman Bhîmsena. His praises are still sung. He was like a full moon. He was a man of character, a saint, lustrous worthy, profoundly wise and observes the injunctions of the Sastras. His bounty was known over the earth. He was like a second Vasistha. His son Rāma Sarasvatī was a reader at the place of Sukladhvaja. He was like a Suka, an Angira or a Tumbaru and could be compared to none. His son Gopīnātha like only a child has composed the verses of the Mahābhārata in short and long rhymes."

Karna-parva (556 padas).—It was rendered during the time of Raghudeva, son of Sukladhvaja. The work gives the account of the Kurukṣetra war (but not under the command of Karna) and Karna's death.

The poet says,—"The city of Vijayanagara in Kāmarūpa is exceedingly beautiful. There are strong walls in very many places. There remains the king Raghudeva who is like a second Indra.....King Naranārāyaṇa praised Raghudeva by saying that in the whole family there was not a hero like him." Thus it shows that the poet wrote this at Vijayanagara during the days of Raghudeva.

Another version of Karņa-parva was written by Vidyā Pañcānana, a son of Kaṇṭhabhūṣaṇa, a contemporary of Saṅkaradeva. Vidyā Pañcānana gives the account of the Kurukṣetra war in his work as having been fought under the command of Karṇa.

One Viṣṇurāma Dvija wrote Dātā Karņa. Karņa's bounty has been extolled so much that he is said to have offered the flesh of his own son by tearing him with a saw. The story is this,— Kṛṣṇa in the guise of a Brāhman appeared before Karṇa and desired to feed upon the flesh of Vṛṣaketu, his son. Karṇa in consultation with his wife offered the flesh. Then the Brāhmaṇ asked Karṇa to invite a boy of the village to partake of the flesh. Karṇa to his great surprise found his own son Vriṣaketu alive. Kṛṣṇa then went away much satisfied with Karṇa's charity. It is thus how Karṇa became immortal.

Šalya-parva.—The work describes the Kurukṣetra war under the command of Śalya, the Rājā of Madra, and his death. The author, Dāmodara Dāsa says,—Barpeṭā is an unequalled village in Kāmarūpa. It looks like a half-moon. Previously there did Śaṅkara, Mādhava, Rāma and Dāmodara live and made known the Lord, and even the most wicked having their blessings crossed the ocean of the world. In the same manner there flourished Bhāgavata Bhaṭṭācāryya. Having his foot-dust on his head the most ignorant Dāmodara makes verses of Śalya Parva (791). The book was written about 1638 A.D., and during the days of Dharmanārāyaṇa, son of Raghudeva.

Sauptika-parva.—This parva was written in verse by one Devarāma alias Durgāprasāda in Saka year 1828. This parva contains the account of the killing of the five sons of Draupadī by Aśvatthāmā and the death of Duryodhana.

Štrī-parva.—This parva does not seem to have been rendered into Assamese verse by any of our ancients. A recent translation in the old types of metre has however been printed.

Sānti-parva.—The poet Lakṣminatha Dvija wrote Sānti-parva in 2859 verses. The work describes the coronation ceremony of Yudhiṣṭhira after the Kurukṣetra war. Bhīṣma, at the request of Sri Kṛṣṇa and Yudhiṣṭhira, gives from his death-bed various discourses on religion, society and politics.

Laksminatha was the grandson of Sarvananda, a great Sanskrit scholar of Helecha in Kamrup. The Ahom king Rudra Simha rewarded Sarvananda for his scholarship. The poet flourished in the third quarter of the 18th century A.D.

Aśvamedha-parva.—This work in verse containing the account of the horse sacrifice performed by the Pāṇḍavas at the end of the battle of Kurukṣetra was written by three poets—Gaṇgādāsa Sena, Subudhi Rāya and Bhavānīdāsa. Gangādās says, he was the son of Ṣaṣṭhivara. These poets are supposed to have hailed from Tripurā. The subject-matter is taken from Jaimini and it contains 3600 verses. The book is written after the style of Nārā-yaṇadeva and Durgābara and some songs are interspersed between the verses.

Vyāsa advises Yudhisthira to perform the sacrifice and Yudhisthira makes preparations. The sacrificial horse is let loose under the protection of Arjuna, who fights with different kings of various countries who obstruct the horse. Arjuna at last comes to Maṇipura where he has a fight with Vabrubāha, his son through Citrāngadā. Arjuna and his followers are all killed. At Citrāngadā and Ulupī's wailings and persuasions Vabrubāha restored all to life by the touch of a valuable jewel got by Vabrubāha from the Nāga king. Both the parties unite in love and admiration. The sacrifice is then performed. The manuscript of this work was discovered at North Gauhati and was deposited with the D.H.A.S., Assam.

Sudhanvā-Vadha (Rāma Sarasvatī).—This is an episode from Aśvamedha-parva describing the fight between Arjuna and Sudhanvā and the latter's death. Hamṣadhvaja, king of Campaka, captures the sacrificial horse and the fight ensues between Arjuna and the king. The king's son Sudhanvā is late to come to the field. The king therefore orders his son to be killed by throwing him into a cauldron of boiling oil. Sudhanvā however is not injured as he is a devotee of God. Sudhanvā then fights with Arjuna and is killed along with his other brother Suratha.

One Dvija Šubhanātha wrote Dharma-samvāda of Aśvamedhaparva at the command of the Āhom king Śivasimha. It is believed to have been written about 1720 A.D.

Another work Sudhanvā-Vadha goes in the name Śrīdhara Kandali.

Mauşala-parva.—Pṛthurāma Dvija wrote Mauşala Parva during the days of and at the request of the minister Pratāpavallabha (of king Kamaleswara Simha). The poet gives the date of the appointment of the minister as 1417 Saka.

The work describes the birth of the Muşala or the iron rod in Dvārakā for the destruction of the family of Yadu. Then it narrates Arjuna's visit to Dvārakā and return to Hastināpura after the obsequial ceremonies of the Yādavas.

Svaragārohaņa-parva.—The poet Gopīnātha completed this work in 308 verses. In verses 171 and 172 the poet says:—"The village named Śilakonā in Pāṭcaurā was adorned with Brahmans. There king Śukladhvaja at the time of the lunar eclipse made offerings to the Ganges. Living at such a village and observing my own religion I have composed verses of Svargārohaṇaparva of Bhārata in various short and long metres.

The work describes the retirement of the Pāṇḍavas after Śrī Kṛṣṇa's departure from the world. Yudhiṣṭhira gives the throne to Parīkṣita, son of Abhimanyu and crossing the Lohit he enters the Himālayan region and ascends the snow-clad regions accompanied by the brothers and Draupadī and a dog. All dropped dead on the way except Yudhiṣṭhira and the dog. He is then carried by Indra to heaven.

Hari-vamsa.—Hari-vamsa is taken as the 19th Parva or a supplementary Parva of the Mahābhārata. The whole of the work is not found to have been rendered into Assamese so far. The portions done are noted below:

Hari-vamsa.-The poet Vidyācandra Bhattācārvva Āgamācaryya, who wrote this work flourished during the rule of the Ahom king Rājeśvarasimha (1751-1769 A.D.). The poet acknowledges the patronage of Carusimha and his princess Premada, The poet in his work narrates Krsna's birth and his doings in Gokula.

One Bhayananda Miśra, son of one Śivananda also wrote on the same subject-matter taken up by the Agamacaryya, In his Govinda Carita the poet refers to the patronage of Candranaravana. king of Darrang (1565-1582 Śāka).

The other poet of Hari-vamsa is Gopālacarana Dvija who flourished during the days of the Koc king Raghudeva about 1558 A.D. The poet was a reputed scholar and had a tol at Barnagar. The poet describes how Krsna killed Narakāsura of Pragivotisapura and placed Bhagadatta on the throne and how Śrī Krsna defeated Indra and took away Pārijāta tree to make a present of it to Satyabhāmā, his wife. The poet mingled the facts of Hari-vamsa, Bhagavata and Visnu Purana, and so it is not a translation from Hari-vamsa,

At the time of Śańkaradeva one poet named Pītāmbara took the themes of Usa-parinaya and Rukmini-harana from Harivamsa. Ananta Kandali also took the facts of the Kumaraharana from the same source.

One of the sources of Sankaradeva's Rukmini-harana (poem and also the drama) and Pārijātaharana was Hari-vamsa.

One Dvija Subhanath at the command of the Ahom king Sivasimha wrote Dharma-samvada from Hari-vamsa.

ASSAMESE VERSIONS OF THE PURANAS

BY

S. N. SARMA

From the earliest times Assam has never been culturally isolated from the rest of India. Whenever there was any cultural or religious upsurge in the rest of India, Assam was not left untouched. The neo-Vaisnavite revival of medieval India was one of such movements which brought a cultural renaissance in Assam. The movement gave an impetus to the growth and development of provincial literatures. Its motto was to popularize the religious teachings by translations of the scriptures written in the none too easily approachable Sanskrit language. The most important branch of Sanskrit scriptures which attracted the notice of the scholar-translators was the puranas which embodied the teachings of the different sects of the puranic Hindu religion. Ancient Assamese literature is mainly translations of the epics and puranas, the majority of which are Vaisnavite in nature. For the proper understanding and appreciation of Assamese versions of the puranas, a short summary of the origin and nature of the puranic literature in general, based mainly on authoritative sources is given below.

The word purāṇa originally meant old narratives (Purāṇam ākhyānam). According to Brāhmanical traditions as recorded in Atharva Veda and Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad, the purāṇa has as much a sacred origin as the Vedas.¹ In the Vedic literature the purāṇa is often called the fifth Veda. But the existence of a special class of books called purāṇas is doubtful. Only the Sūtra literature is the existence of the real purāṇas definitely known. But the purāṇas mentioned in the Sūtra literature might have undergone many changes before it took the nature and form of the present purāṇas. "It is indeed very likely that the purāṇas are only recasts of older works of the same species, namely of works of religious and didactic contents in which were collected ancient traditions of the creation, the deeds of the gods, the beginning of the famous royal families and so on."2

L. Atharva Veda, XI. 7. 24; Brh. Upanisad, II, 4. 10.

^{2.} Winternitz: History of Indian Literature, Vol. I, p. 520.

It can hardly be denied that more than one purăna had come into existence long before the beginning of the Christian era. In the Samhitās of Manu and Jājnavalkya the word purăna has been used in the plural number and Āpastamba's Dharma Sūtra has a passage quoted from Bhavisyat-Purāna.

It is not precisely known when the tradition of the 'eighteen purāṇas' came into vogue. The earliest mention of 'eighteen purāṇas' is found in the Svargāgorhaṇa-Parva of the Mahābhārata and in the third part of Harivaṃśa. But scholars are of opinion that these passages enumerating the 'eighteen purāṇas' are interpolations. But still it is held that the earliest purāṇas must have come into being before the 7th century of the Christian era, for neither later dynasties, nor famous rulers, such as Harṣa, occur in the list of kings. The tradition of the 'eighteen purāṇas' also must have originated not later than the first quarter of the 7th century A.D.3 Of course, compiling of new purāṇas and adding fresh chapters to older ones went on till the twelfth and thirteenth centuries. Thus the process of composition of the purāṇas may roughly be placed between the early centuries of the Christian era and the thirteenth century.

It is not definitely known what were the nature and form of the earliest puranas, as many changes took place during the process of their evolution. A very old definition says that a purana should have five characteristics: (1) Creation (sarga), (2) recreation (pratisarga), (3) Genealogy (vamśa), (4) Cosmic Cycles (manvantara), (5) Accounts of royal dynasties (vamśānucarita). All these characteristics have their roots in Akhyanas (tales), Upākhyānas (anecdotes), Gāthās (songs) and Kalpajoktis (lores handed down). These characteristics therefore indicate the nature of the puranas in their earliest form. In the extant puranas these five-fold characteristics however occupy a very insignificant part and great importance is laid in describing religious, social and sectarian matters. New additions include Vrtti (means of livelihood), Raksā (incarnations of gods), Mukti (emancipation), Hetu (jiva), Apāśraya (brahma). Gradually the purāņas came to lose their original character and began to incorporate also chapters on rites and customs such as Ācāra (customs and manners), Varņāśramadharma (duties of castes), Śrāddha (oblation to manes), Prāyaścitta (expiation and purification), Dāna (gift), Pūjā (worship), Vrata (vow), Tirtha (pilgrimage), Pratistha (installation of deity), Dīkṣā (initiation). Still more embracing is the definition given by Matsya- Purāṇa which states that the purāṇas may deal with the glorification of Brahma, Visnu, Surya or Rudra, with creation, preservation and dissolution of the world and with Dharma, Artha, Kāma and Moksa. The great importance given to the puranas as Smrti works, perverted the idea of the people of later ages as to the real contents of these works. It was thought that the original five characteristics, viz., creation, recreation, etc. are meant for Upapurāņas, the Mahāpurāņas should have not less than ten characteristics relating to cosmogony, religion, and society. But really speaking the Upapurānas do not in general differ from Mahāpurāṇas, except that the Upapurāṇas are exclusively adapted to suit the purposes of local cults and sects. The number of Upapuranas are too numerous to mention, but the following eighteen puranas are generally regarded as the Māhāpurāṇas-(1) Mārkandeya, (2) Vāyu, (3) Brahmānda, (4) Visnu, (5) Matsya, (6) Bhāgavata, (7) Kūrma, (8) Vāmana, (9) Linga, (10) Varāha, (11) Pādma, (12) Nāradīya, (13) Agni, (14) Garuda, (15) Brahma (16) Skanda, (17) Brahmavaivarta and (18) Bhavisya,

The importance of the puranas for the proper study of Hindu India cannot be over-estimated. In the words of Dr. Winternitz, "They afford us far greater insight into all aspects and phases of Hinduism—its mythology, its idol worship, its theism and pantheism, its love of God, its philosophy and its superstition, its festivals and ceremonies and its ethics than any other works."

II

Having given in a nutshell the origin, development, nature and characteristics of the puranas we now proceed to deal with the circumstances under which the puranas were translated into Assamese and the nature and types of literature translated or adapted from the puranas and finally the modes of their translation.

The devotional Vaisnavite movement initiated by Rāmānuja in the South was carried over to the north by Rāmānanda who made a tremendous effort to popularize the Bhakti cult by throwing open the portal of religion to all sections of people and also by encouraging provincial dialects as the medium of religious teachings and expressions. His immediate disciple Kavir made a further contribution to the popularizing of the provincial dialects as vehicles of religious expressions. Kavir is said to have spoken of Sanskrit as the water of a stagnant well and of the vernaculars as that of a flowing stream. But even before Rāmānanda and Kavir advocated the cause of the vernacular as the medium of the religious literature, Assamese poets of the fourteenth century boldly and efficiently translated the entire Rāmāyana of Vālmiki and some episodes of the Mahābhārāta. In case of Assamese poets of the fifteenth century headed by Sankaradeva, it cannot be said that they derived their main inspiration from Kavir or Rāmānanda. It is true that Śankaradeva makes a passing reference to the popularity of Kavir's songs in places like Orissa and Banaras, and it may also be true that Sankaradeva in his lengthy pilgrimage of twelve years' duration in northern and southern India might have received additional impetus from the religious and literary reorientation started by Rāmānanda, Kavir and others. But the method of popularizing the religious teachings by means of popular translations from the puranas was not certainly derived by Sankaradeva from extra-provincial sources. He derived it from Mādhava Kandali, Hema Sarasvatī and other literary predecessors who initiated the move of popular translation.

^{4.} Winternitz: H. I. L., Vol. I, p. 528.

252

The neo-Vaisnavite movement started by Sankaradeva created a band of poet-translators whose proselytizing zeal was of an extraordinary kind. Ananta Kandali, a contemporary poet of Sankaradeva clearly expresses that he could compose excellent verses in Sanskrit, but he discarded that in favour of the people's dialect in order to enlighten the masses. Similarly Damodaradeva, another contemporary proselytizer of Sankaradeva instructed his favourite disciple Bhattadeva to render the Bhagavata and Gita into simple Assamese prose so that all sections of people including females and non-Brahmans could understand them. These and many other such instances, clearly evidence the zeal of the mediaeval Assamese proselytizers to educate the masses in the sphere of religion. These scholars could clearly perceive that the most fruitful source of religious literature from which they could derive materials to educate the mass was the puranic literature in Sanskrit, because it contains popular elements which the other branches lack. But it was not an easy job to render Sanskrit puranas into the provincial dialect. Firstly, the provincial language till then had not attained the status of a proper vehicle for the expression of high ideas, and philosophical thoughts.

Secondly, the Sanskrit language by virtue of being the Deva-Bhāṣā in popular estimation, was held in the highest esteem which the newly-born N.I.A. languages could hardly claim. Thirdly, the puranas occupying the position of the Smrtis, received the highest regard and veneration, and rendering them into the provincial dialect had the possibility of being construed as sacrilege on the part of the translators. There is an interesting incident narrated in Tungkhungia-Buranji, which illustrates the attitude of a certain section of people towards this act of translation even as late as the seventeenth century. One Deberā Barbarua was prosecuted for regicide. When asked by his captors as to why he involved himself in that nefarious act, he replied, "Have I alone translated Daśama (Book X of Bhāgavata Purāņa)? You will also do it." He meant thereby that the act of translating Daśama which was an act of sacrilege was not done by one person, it was the product of more than one. Early Assamese hagiographies narrate instances of complaints against Sankaradeva in the royal court for his act of rendering Bhagavata into the language of everyday use. So the poets had to be constantly on guard by repeatedly reminding the readers that nothing had been written in their books which the original texts did not contain.5

One of the important factors that contributed towards the growth of puranic literature in Assamese was the royal patronage received by the translators. King Durlabhanarayana of Kamatapur (14th century), King Naranarayana of Koc Behar (16th century), the Ahom king Rudra-Sinha and Siva-Sinha (18th century) are some of the notable royal personalities whose patronage greatly helped the growth of puranic literature and the diffusion of culture in Assam. To the courts of these kings flocked scholars and poets from different parts of the country seeking shelter and patronage. They were not only supplied with books, and other scholarly equipments but also with lands and servants. Thus the translators-cum-poets being free from economic worries could whole-heartedly engage themselves on their literary pursuit.

Another important factor was the Vaiṣṇavite Satra institution where the purāṇas were regularly read and translated. There were hundreds of such Satras scattered throughout the Brahmaputra Valley. The Satra institution voluntarily took upon itself the duty of imparting religious and moral education to the people. For this purpose a regular band of scholars was maintained whose duty it was to read and explain the puranas. In order to facilitate explanation and recitation regular translations were made. Private patronage is also a factor that cannot be altogether ignored.

^{5.} Dr. B. Kakati: Purani Assamiyā Sāhitya, p. 83 (second edition).

The translations of the pre-Sankarite period mainly confined themselves to the Rāmāyana and the Mahābhārata. With the advent of Sankaradeva towards the end of the fifteenth century, translation of puranas with a Vaisnavite leaning was undertaken. But the purana which drew most attention was Bhagavata Purana. As a matter of fact, Bhagavata Purana formed the main-spring from which emanated the various types of early Assamese literature. Not only was the entire purana translated, its various stories and episodes supplied the basis of independent kavyas. In the latter part of the seventeenth century Assamese literature became more diffused and puranas of various types came to be translated under the patronage of the Ahom rulers. Brahmavaivarta Purana with its erotic flavour was the special attraction of the court poets and in this period the Sakta element found its way into early Assamese literature,

Assamese puranic literature can be classified into two main types: (1) pure translations, abridged or unabridged, (2) adaptations. Verse was the usual form of translation, but occasionally the translators resorted to prose and dramatic forms also. In a few cases the puranic stories are seen to be expressed through a series of songs, attuned to various melodies. No hard and fast rule was followed by the poets. The translation could be free or literal according to the nature of the subject-matter and the expediency of the translator. Some of the common characteristics of the translation are noted below:

- (i) The poets in order to give to their writings certain popular touches introduced wherever possible local colour. In describing marriage festivals, foods and ornaments, construction of houses and characters, the poets freely introduced local colour. This is more often resorted to in the case of adaptations than in the case of pure translations. As a result the characters of Assamese versions have lost in many places, their original epic-dignity.
- (ii) Avoidance of philosophical discourses is one of the marked features of Assamese translations. Minimum importance has been given to philosophical disquisitions. The translations were mainly intended for the villagers without an adequate background of philosophical knowledge. Therefore, what was considered to be highly abstract or contained minute philosophical discussion, was avoided in their translations. But this does not mean that they banished philosophy altogether. Philosophical discussions or disquisitions were retained in much simpler forms where these seemed to be absolutely necessary to give a proper idea or setting of a certain story.

- (iii) In contrast to the philosophical narratives, the devotional elements have secured special favour and attraction from the poettranslators. Hymns and prayers of the original versions have been translated in detail and sometimes even in an elaborated manner.
- (iv) Additional narratives detailing the Vaiṣṇavite ideals have been appended to every chapter of the Assamese versions. The superiority of the Bhakti cult, the greatness of Kṛṣṇa or Viṣṇu, the merits of singing or listening to His exploits and such other didactic descriptions have been inserted profusely. Even in the midst of the narration of a certain story the writers sometimes abruptly stop to sermonise on those topics.
- (v) Though insistence upon Vaisnavite ideals is predominating, yet certain attractive topics are seen to be enthusiastically depicted. For instance, the bodily charms, especially of women, parks and gardens, and of cities on festive occasions, are some of the favourite topics where the poet-translators seem to be very eloquent. The inclusion of such narratives are mainly intended to catch the popular imagination.
- (vi) Another important feature of Assamese versions of the puranas is the constant repetition of the same set of descriptions with slight modifications here and there. For instance we find the description of Kṛṣṇa or Viṣṇu's bodily beauty, illustrated through the same set of similes and metaphors repeated in different places. Similarly the description of one lake or one garden is as good as that of another lake or garden depicted in a different setting or context.
- (vii) One of the favourite methods adopted by the translators to make their stories much more interesting was to introduce into the texture of one story, descriptions and incidents of the same story described in another purāṇa. For instance, they would introduce incidents of a story from Viṣṇu Purāṇa into the texture of the same story taken from Bhāgavata Purāṇa. This method of blending of incidents and descriptions of different purāṇas has been frequently resorted to in case of the kāvyas partly based on translations. In case of works wholly based on translation also this feature is sometimes noticeable. To cite one example, the translator of the Book IX of Bhagavata Purana in course of his translation of the episode of King Hariscandra introduces certain descriptions from the same episode narrated in Markandeva Purana.

(viii) Throughout puranic literature in Assamese, the same set of metres is seen to be used to express similar sentiments. The most commonly used metre is known as Pada (a metre of four lines, each consisting of fourteen syllables). This is used in ordinary narratives. An emotional or a sentimental description is generally couched in Tripadi metre (a Tripadi consists of six feet divided into two parts of three feet each, the third and the sixth foot rhyming). In descriptions of lamentations, supplications, etc, Lechārī or Dīrgha-Tripadī is invariably used. Similarly to describe duals or hand to hand fights Jhumuri consisting of eight syllables in each line) is often employed. This mode of using a particular metre to denote a particular sentiment is not a characteristic of the puranic literature alone, it is a feature which characterizes the whole field of early Assamese literature.

Having given some of the general features of the puranic literature in Assamese it will not be out of place here to say a few words about the language used by the early poets. The language used by the medieval poets is an artificial literary language based on the spoken dialect. Because of this artificiality we do not see any appreciable change between the language used by a poet of the nineteenth century from that of the fifteenth or sixteenth century and same conventional descriptions in set words, phrases and imagery are found to be used by the poets of different centuries in describing certain topics.

III

It would not be convenient to discuss the Assamese versions in the chronological order as various parts of different puranas were composed at different times. Therefore the discussion of each purana irrespective of the times in which its different parts, were composed has been undertaken in the following pages, giving priority to those puranss which are more popular and familiar in Assamese society.

I BHAGAVATA PURANA

Introductory.-Bhāgavata Purāna belongs to the later productions of the puranic literature in Sanskrit. The date of its composition has been variously given by different scholars ranging from the 6th century to the 10th century of the Christian era. In content it is closely connected with the Vişnu Purāṇa. It is divided into twelve Books, and consists of 18000 slokas. Dr. Winternitz remarks about this purāṇa that "It is the one Purāṇa which more than any others bears the stamp of a unified composition and deserves to be appreciated as a literary production on account of its language, style and metre."

Assamese Versions.—Bhāgavata Purāņa holds the first and the foremost position in Assamese life and society. The Vaiṣṇavite creed expounded by Śaṅkaradeva and his followers gave it the supreme position in their list of śāstras and in the village and domestic chapels or in the monastic institutions (Satras) a manuscript copy of Bhāgavata is worshipped or adored in place of an idol or image. In every monastic institution of the highest rank a Bhāgavatā is attached whose duty it is to read and explain chapters from Bhāgavata. Assamese Hindus have a belief that an impending calamity, in the shape of illness and other misfortune, can be averted by a solemn vow to arrange for the recital of a few chapters from Bhāgavata. Besides numerous episodical works based on Bhāgavata there are two complete versions of this purāṇa, written in prose and verse respectively. In all these versions the commentary by Śrīdhara-Svāmī is followed.

(1) Pada-Bhāgavata.—The translation of Bhāgavata Purāna commenced from the first half of the 16th century and it was initiated by that great reformer Sankaradeva himself.⁶ Sankaradeva could not translate the entire purāna, but a major portion of it was done by himself. Because of the unique position held by this purāna over Assamese life and society a detailed discussion of its several Books is given below.

Book I.—The Sanskrit version of this Book contains nineteen chapters dealing with the origin of the purāṇa, the enumeration of twenty-four incarnations, the story of the birth of Parīkṣita, the Pāṇḍava's last journey, the chastisement of Kali by Parīkṣita and the subsequent fate of Parīkṣita in consequence of the curse pronounced upon him by a sage. The purāṇa was originally narrated by Sukadeva to Parīkṣita on the eve of his death, but it was retold in the present form by Sūta to the assembly of sages at Naimiṣa forest. Sankaradeva himself translated this Book. He was a scholar, a poet and a reformer all in one. In his translation of the different Books of Bhāgavata he has adopted a method of omission and selection. Some topics have been totally left out, others have been summarized and still others have been elucidated. The first six chapters of the Book I have been summarized indicating only the main incidents of those chapters of which the third chapter dealing with the twenty-four incarnations of Nārā-yaṇa has been totally omitted. The opening benedictory stanza is also omitted because of its highly philosophical nature, replacing it by a simple devotional prayer. Of the remaining chapters, the contents of the 4th 5th, 13th and 15th chapters have been summarized. Only those topics have been elucidated where devotional elements enjoining Vaiṣṇavite ideals are predominant.

As a separate chapter has been devoted to the discussion of Sankaradeva's life and teachings, no further treatment seems necessary here.

Book II.—This Book is also a translation by Sankaradeva. The original Sanskrit version contains ten chapters dealing mainly with the description of the Virāṭa Puruṣa (the Great Being) and the process of the creation. In the Assamese version the 1st, 2nd and 5th chapters are practically omitted. The description of the Virāṭa-Puruṣa of the 1st and 5th chapters is replaced by a description of Kṛṣṇa's bodily grace and charm, and the discussions on Yoga (meditation) of the 2nd chapter are similarly side-tracked by a mere passing reference to it, and that too is discredited in the succeeding lines by emphasizing on Śravana (listening) and Kīrtana (recitation) in preference to any other mode of attaining or seeking God. In the translation of the 4th chapter, Sankaradeva makes reference to the different tribes of Assam, who could even attain salvation by sheltering themselves under the feet of Kṛṣṇa. The original texts in Sanskrit have been quoted below:

"Kirāta Hūnāndhra Pulinda Pukkašā Ābhīra Kanka-Yavanākhasādayah |

Ye anye ca pāpā yadupāśrayāśrayāh śudhyanti tasmai prabhavisnave namah ||

-2/4/18.

(I salute Him, taking shelter under whom the Kirātas, Hūṇas, Andhras, Pulindas, Abhīras, Yavanas and such other sinners become pure and sanctified).

Sankaradeva has replaced those unfamiliar tribes by the tribes living in Assam.

"Kirāta Kachāri, Khāsi Gāro Miri Yavana Kanka Goāl | Acama-Maluka Rajaka Turuk Kuvāca Mleccha Cāndāl ||

Ano pāpī nara Kṛṣṇa sevakar Saṅgata pavitra hay | Bhakati labhiyā saṃsāra tariyā Vaikunthe sukhe calay |

- 2/474-75.

(The Kirātas, Kachāris, Khāsis, Gāros, Miris, Yavanas, Kańkas, Goālas, Acamas, Turuks, Rajakas (washermen), Kuvācas (Koces), Mlecchas, Caṇḍālas and all other sinners get sanctified in contact with a devotee of Kṛṣṇa. Attaining bhakti they go to heaven being emancipated from this world).

In the translation of the 7th chapter the exploits of Rāmacandra and Vāsudeva-Kṛṣṇa are enumerated in details, while those of other incarnations only are mentioned.

There is another metrical version of Book II composed by Aniruddha Kāyastha in the early part of the 17th century. Aniruddha Kāyastha was the grandson of the elder brother of Mādhavadeva, and was a minister of the Koc king Raghudeva (1584-1591). It seems to be a faithful translation of the Sanskrit texts. But this work is not so popular as the one composed by Sankaradeva.

Book III.-The Sanskrit version containing thirty-three chapters, describes, besides cosmogonical matters, the meeting of Maitreya and Vidura and the former's religious instructions to the latter, the story of the Boar incarnation of Visnu, Kapila's teaching of his mother Devahuti which include amongst others the Sāmkhya doctrine. The translator of this Book is Gopālacaraņa Dvija. From the introductory lines inserted within his work it can be gathered that he was a follower of Damodaradeva (1483-1598) and lived for some time in the Vaikunthapura Satra of the latter. He took upon himself the task of translating some portions of the Bhagavata Purana complying with the request of the Vaisnavas of that Satra, after the demise of Damodaradeva. Therefore it is probable that he translated this part of the purana in the later half of the seventeenth century. Gopălacarana Dvija was not probably an immediate or direct disciple of Damodaradeva. In his translation of Harivamśa, Gopālacarana introduces himself as the disciple of Gopāla Miśra, a disciple and colleague of Damodaradeva. In this connection he also refers to Baladeva, another close associate of Dāmodaradeva who succeeded the latter in the Vaikuṇṭhapura Satra. The lines run thus:

Gopāla gurur pāve paraņāmiyā mane | Baladeva vākya šire dhariyā yatane || Iṣtadevatār dui dhariyā caraņe | Padacaya bhaņe dvija Gopālacaraņe ||

(Saluting the feet of his guru Gopāla, carefully abiding by the words of Baladeva and holding the feet of the Benevolent One Gopālacarana composes these verses).

So far, three works composed by Gopālacarana viz., the 3rd and the 8th Books of the Bhāgavata and the Harivamśa have come to light. Gopālacarana respectfully refers to Śańkaradeva as the pioneer reformer and poet in two places? of his translation.

The first four chapters of the Book III have been briefly summarized by Gopalacarana as the contents of these chapters have been elaborately dealt with by Sankaradeva in his Anādi Pātan and in Vaikunthaprayana episode of Kirtana. The translator himself adduces the above reason for summarizing these chapters.8 The remaining chapters have been faithfully rendered into Assamese verses with occasional elucidations here and there. It should be borne in mind that this Book is one of the most abstruse and philosophical in nature specially the cosomogonical portions and the teachings of Kapila to Devahuti. Naturally profound scholarship, with no less poetical genius is necessary to render these portions successfully. Gopālacarana fulfils these conditions. He gives full scope to the poet in him in the description of Vaikuntha (Bh., Chapter XV) or in the narration of the fight between Baraha and Hiranyakṣa (Bh., Ch. XVIII), but he is sober and disciplined in rendering the teachings of Kapila. But everywhere, be it philosophical teaching, or cosmogonical speculation, the emphasis is laid on devotion towards Visnu.

Book IV.—The original version in thirty-one chapters describes the sacrifices of Dakṣa and its subsequent molestation by the followers of Siva, the self-immolation of Satī, the stories of Dhruva, Vena and Pṛthu and Purañjana. This Book was translated by four poets. The first chapter which describes the genealogy of the daughters of Manu has been translated by one Jayrāma who introduces himself as the disciple of Gopālacarana,⁹ possibly the translator of the third Book. Chapters 2-13 containing the stories of the sacrifices of Dakṣa, and of Dhruva, Vena and Pṛthu are narrated by Kalāpacandra, who wrote under the inspiration of King Naranārāyaṇa (1540-1580 A.D.). Kalāpacandra is a poet of some eminence as is evidenced by his flawless translation of the above twelve chapters. Rādhā-Carita by Kalāpacandra is another important contribution to Assamese literature. His rendering of the above stories is free and faultless, with minor deviations here and there. The narratives of Dakṣa's railings against Śiva, the molestations of his sacrifice by Vīrabhadra and of the city of Alakā are some of the notable descriptions, where Kalāpacandra's poetic genius finds expression.

^{7.} Srimad bhagavatha: Book III, verses 692 and 1899 (H. N. Dutta Barua edition).

^{8.} Ibid., V. 767.

The episode of Dhruva has been treated separately by another poet of the same period. He introduces himself as Viṣṇubhārati, the son of one Kaviratna. Though nothing is definitely known about him it may be presumed that he is the same Viṣṇu Bhārati who is mentioned by Rāmānanda Dvija in his biography of Vaṃśīgopāladeva as a devout Vaiṣṇava and of whom the biographer Rāmānanda is the grandson. If this assumption is correct then the date of the composition of this part of Book IV can be reasonably fixed towards the early part of the seventeenth century. It is also a free but faithful translation of the original texts without any deviation in matter. A very beautiful description of the royal city decorated on the occasion of Dhruva's coronation ceremony is the special feature of this episode.

The last important episodes of Book IV are the allegorical story of King Puranjana and his subsequent change of sex and the story of Pracinavarhi and the ten Pracetas. These two episodes have been translated by Ratnakara Miśra, who has to his credit two other works, viz. Gītā-Kīrtana, and Brahma-Gītā. Nothing is definitely known of this Ratnakara Miśra. Probably he can be identified with Ratnakara Kandali, the celebrated writer of Ghunucā Kīrtana and a favourite disciple of Śańkaradeva. In the later case, the work is a composition of the sixteenth century. Ratnakara Miśra's translation is a faithful and simple rendering of the original Sanskrit version. The only case of deviation is found in his translation of the narratives about ten Pracetas where he introduces the story of the conflict between Dakṣa and Śiva.

^{9.} Ibid., Book IV, vs. 1979.

There is another Assamese version of the last seven chapters of Book IV, translated by Aniruddhadeva, the founder of the Māyāmarā sect. The following account of his life is found in the biography and genealogy of Aniruddhadeva. Aniruddha's ancestor's name was Mahipāla who was a local chief at Nārāyanpura on the north of the Lohit (Brahmaputra) river. Mahipāla had four sons of whom Gondāgiri, the father of Aniruddha was the youngest. Aniruddha is supposed to have been born in 1553 and died in 1623 A.D. In addition to this work of Book IV, Aniruddha is credited with the composition of Bhāgavata, Book V and a book of religious songs. As has been noted above Aniruddha composed the last seven chapters of Book IV, which depict the episodes of Purañjana and the ten Pracetas.

Book V.—Book V of Bhagavata contains twentysix chapters. It begins with an account of Priyavrata, Nābhi, Rsabha, Bharata and his genealogy. It then gives an account of the several Varsas (regions) and vindicates the superiority of Bharatavarsa. Towards the end it gives an account of the fourteen Lokas (worlds) of the Universe with a description of hell. The translator of this Book is Aniruddha Kāyastha. But he should not be confused with Aniruddha spoken of in connection with the previous Book, although the latter also composed the fifth Book. Aniruddha Kāyastha was the minister of King Raghudeva (1584-1596) of the eastern Koc kingdom. In the introductory lines of his translation Aniruddha respectfully refers to Sankaradeva and humbly presents himself as the grandson of Dāmodara, the elder brother of Mādhavadeva.10 Aniruddha's father's name was Ramacandra. He composed this work under the inspiration of king Raghudeva, and completed it in the year 1602 A.D. (1524 Saka).11

Book V of the Sanskrit version is mostly written in an ornate prose style, full of long compounds and imagery. Aniruddha has admirably translated it into lucid Assamese. His lucid exposition of chapter XIII containing an allegorical description of the world (Bhavāṭavi-varṇana) bears testimony to his scholarship. He has fully dealt with the story of Jada-Bharata describing it to the minutest detail, but reticently summarizes the latter part of the Book wherein are described the various regions and positions and movements of the planets and stars. He has completely omitted

^{10.} Ibid., Book V, verses 4302-4306.

^{11.} Ibid., verses 5176-77.

the last chapter (Chap. XXVI) where the horrid description of hell is narrated,

Two more Assamese versions of this Book, approximately of the same age, are to be found. One is a work of Aniruddha of the Māyāmarā sect and the other one is composed by Harideva. The latter hailed from Hājo and composed his work at Barpeta when Dāmodaradeva was still living there. He gratefully refers to Sankaradeva also.

Book VI.-Out of nineteen chapters of Book VI translation of fourteen chapters is found in Assamese. No translation of chapters 4, 5, 6, 8, 19 has come to light so far. But the two most important episodes of this Book, viz., the stories of Ajāmila and Vrttrāsura have been fully dealt with. The first three chapters of the original text describes how Ajāmila, a confirmed sinner, ultimately attained salvation by uttering the name of Nārāyana at the moment of his death, though that was the name of his son only. The story emphasizes the glory and efficacy of Hari-nāma. Sankaradeva is the translator of this episode. This same episode in a summary form finds a place in his Kirtana also. Sankaradeva begins his translation with a vivid description of hell which however forms the subject-matter of the last chapter of the previous Book, and ends with an eulogy of the Vaisnavite ideals. comes from the masterly pen of Sankaradeva, it reads like an original work though in reality a faithful translation.

The second episode runs from the seventh chapter till the end of the seventeenth chapter. It describes the cause that led to the birth of Vrttrāsura as the rival of Indra and his ultimate death in the fight. From the fourteenth to the seventeenth chapter the previous life and deeds of Vrttrāsura as king Citraketu have been narrated. Ananta Kandali alias Candra Bhārati, one of the most powerful and voluminous writers of the Vaisnavite period, is the translator of this episode. He has appended a short history of his family to this composition from which we can gather that his real name was Haricarana given by his father Ratna Pathak who was a renowned scholar and expounder of Bhāgavata at the Mādhava temple at Hajo. Haricarana was a prolific writer and gained many literary distinctions and acquired titles like Candra Bhārati, Bhāgavata Bhattāchāryya and Ananta Kandali.12 Junior in age, he was a close associate of Sankaradeva and most probably was a disciple also. Ananta Kandali is the author of several works of which Bhāgavata, Book X (part II), the Rāmāyana and Kumārharaņa-Kāvya deserve special mention.

^{12.} Ibid., Book VI; verses 5821-5830.

Vrttrāsura-badha episode of Ananta Kandali is literally faithful to the original texts, only the didactic portions appended to each chapter and the description of the appearance of Viṣṇu to the supplicating gods in all His divine glory and charm are his own innovations. But certain unexplained allusions in the original version have been fully elucidated by the Assamese poet for the convenience of the readers. The story of Dadhīci's selflessness and truthfulness in his dealing with the twin-gods Aśvinīkumāra may be cited in support of the statement. The story has been fully dealt with by the Assamese poet, whereas this anecdote has been simply alluded to without being illustrated or explained in the Sanskrit version.

Book VII.—Book VII contains fifteen chapters of which the first ten chapters exclusively deal with the famous story of Prahlāda and the Man-lion (Nara-Simha) incarnation of Viṣṇu, the remaining five chapters describe and enjoin different types of Dharma (duties) to be followed by peoples of various castes and Asramas (stages of life). Keśava Kāyastha, the grandson of Bangañāgiri, a brother of Śańkaradeva is the translator of this Book.¹³ From the manner of treating the philosophical topics, Keśava Kāyastha seems to be a scholar of some eminence. He has fully dealt with the story of Prahlāda without omitting anything. But the last five chapters of the Book have been summarized in a nutshell, as the materials of this portion are lifeless didactic teachings.

Book VIII.—This Book containing twentyfour chapters treats mainly of the following topics: (i) Grāha-Gajendropākhyāna (wherein are described the fight between the grāha (the alligator) and the gajendra (the king of elephants) and their ultimate emancipation); (ii) Amrtamanthana (the churning of the ocean by gods and demons for nectar); (iii) Balichalana (wherein is described how Bali the king of demons was outwitted by Vāmana, the Dwarf incarnation of Viṣṇu). The above three episodes practically cover the entire Book excepting the first and the last chapter. Three different Assamese versions of the first episode are known so far, composed by Śańkaradeva, Gopālacarana Dvija and Kesava Kāyastha respectively. Sańkaradeva's version is incorporated in his ^{13.} Ibid., VII, verses 10046-10052.

For biographical sketches of Gopălacarana and Kesava Kāyastha, see discussion on Book III and VII.

Kīrtana and therefore deserves separate treatment. Gopālacarana's version is more detailed. Besides translating the first four chapters containing the accounts of four Manvantaras and Grāha-Gajendropākhyāna with minute details, Gopālacarana gives a rapid survey of the contents of the next ten chapters, viz. the Amritamanthana episode and finally concludes with an account of the different Manus narrated in the fourteenth chapter.¹⁵

The second episode, viz., Amrtamanthana episode, runs from the fifth to the thirteenth chapter of the original version. The Assamese version is composed by Sankaradeva. It is a free rendering of the original abounding with poetical, as well as popular touches, as such it partakes of the nature of an original work but for the retention of the original narratives and descriptions in the midst of his own descriptions. Wherever the story element predominates, his imagination finds its full scope. The story of a snake and a mouse (Sarpa-muṣika Kathā), the entry of gods into the audience chamber of Bali, and the reception they received there, the emergence of Lakṣmi from the ocean and her choice of husband, the beauty of Mohinī and the ludicurous behaviour of Siva towards her, the graphic and pictorial beauty of the Upavana, are some of the narratives and descriptions, indicative of the poet's genius and originality.

The Balichalana episode runs from the fifteenth to the penultimate chapter, and is a translation by Sankaradeva. Like the previous episode, this one also contains many original descriptions though there is no vital deviation in matter from the original. The order of the development of the story and the incidents thereof are entirely taken from Bhāgavata. The element from Vāmana Purāṇa which the poet has acknowledged to have introduced is negligible. The description of Sutala (the nether world) towards the concluding part is the only conspicuous element of Vāmana Purāṇa. The vivid description of Amaravati, the object and pitiable plight of gods in their exile and a few more descriptions of the Assamese version are original.

Book IX.—This Book of the original version consisting of twenty-four chapters relates the history and genealogy of the solar and lunar dynasties with the exploits of some of the notable kings. The following are some of the important episodes narrated in this Book - (i) The story of Sukanya, (ii) the story of king Ambarisa and Durvāsā, (iii) deeds of the notable kings of the family of Iksāku, (iv) exploits of Kārtavīryārjuna and his conflict with Paraśurāma, (v) the story of Yayāti, Devayānī and the genealogy of Puru. Keśava Kāyastha already mentioned in Book VI, entirely translates this part of Bhagavata. His translation is faithful and literal as far as practicable. Only on few occasions he has deviated a little from the original texts. The notable deviation occurs in narrating the story of King Hariscandra. Here immediately after describing the incident of Hariscandra's human sacrifice to Varuna to grant him a son, the poet goes on to narrate the episode of Hariścandra's gift to Viśvāmitra and his subsequent fate, culminating in his servitude under a Candala. The latter episode does not form a part of Bhagavata Purāņa; it has been introduced from Mārkandeya Purāņa. narrating the story of the Rāmāyana described in the tenth chapter of the original the poet takes more liberty. Similarly references to Nahusa's turning into a python, the curse pronounced by Kaca upon Devayani, have been adequately illustrated or elucidated in the Assamese version. But the uninteresting genealogies have been briefly passed over.

^{15.} As I have not got the opportunity of going through Kesava Kāyastha's version, details could not be supplied.

Chapters 23-31 and 76-95 of the extant Vāmana Purāna narrate the Balichalana episode.

266

Book X.—This is the most important and popular part of Bhāgavata. Its popularity can be imagined from the fact that the entire Bhāgavata is sometimes popularly though erroneously called Daśama. The principal cause of its immense popularity is that in this Book the life and deeds of Kṛṣṇa, the one and the only adorable God of Assamese Vaiṣṇavites, have been depicted. It is imperative for an Assamese Vaiṣṇava to recite some portions of the Book as a part of his daily devotional routine.

The original text contains ninety chapters depicting the life and deeds of Kṛṣṇa to the minutest detail, from his birth till the end of his mortal career; the actual death is shown in the next Book. Synchronizing with three stages of Kṛṣṇa's life, this Book has been translated in three parts, i.e. (i) Ādi-Daśama (Daśama, Part II), (ii) Madhya-Daśama (Part II) and (iii) Śesa-Daśama (Part III), by Śańkaradeva and Ananta Kandali, respectively.

Adi-Dasama covers the contents of the fortynine chapters of the original version beginning from the birth of Kṛṣṇa, till the episode of Gopi-Uddhava-samvada. It comes from the facile pen of Sankaradeva. This part of Bhāgavata by Sankaradeva truly reflects his poetic genius by its wealth of details, mastery of style, adequate and proper illustrations, homeliness of language and effective creation of atmosphere. He has amply demonstrated here his power of selection and omission of details narrated in the original version, without any vital deviation. The emphasis of the Vaiṣṇavite ideals, supremacy of the Bhakti-cult, glory and charms of the Adorable One, profusion of prayers and hymns, and homeliness of atmosphere are some of the important features of his translation. A tendency to avoid abstruse philosophical elements could be discerned in his translation, but those which seem to him unavoidable have been made lucid as far as possible. The following translation placed alongside the original texts will be helpful to get an idea of his translation.

Ekāyanah asau dviphalastrimūlah caturasah pañcavidhah sadātmā |

Saptatvagastavitapo navāksa dašacchadī dvikhagah ādi brksah |

10/2/27.

(This primal world-tree has one prop, two fruits, three roots, four kinds of juice, five differentiations, six vital elements, seven kinds of coverings, eight branches, nine eyes or holes and ten leaves having two birds on it.)

The Assamese rendering runs thus:-

Prakṛti āśrayī āche ādi bṛkṣa sukha dukha dui phal |
tini guṇa mūla artha cāri raṣa
śiphāye indriya val |
chaya ūrmi ātmā sāta dhātu chāla śākhāye āṭha Prakṛti | daśa vāyu pāta Iśa jīva dui
pakṣī thāke tāta niti ||

(Adi-Daśama, Vv. 10489-10490).

(This primal world-tree resting upon Prakṛti has two fruits in the shape of happiness and misery. Three guṇas (Sattva, Raja and Tama) are its main roots, four ideals of life (Dharma, Artha, Kāma and Mokṣa) are its juice or sap and the senses are its offshoots of the roots, six elements (sorrow, death, hunger, thirst, etc. known as Ūrmis) are its soul or vital organ; seven Dhātus (skin, blood, flesh, fat, bones, marrows and semen) as its coverings, eight Prakṛtis (five gross elements, mind, ego and intellect) are its branches, ten types of winds (Pāna, Apāna, Vyāna, etc.) are its leaves. In this world-tree always reside two birds—the finite and the infinite soul (God).) Sometimes, with a view to add a lustre to the original picture Śańkaradeva is seen to add a few more striking metaphors or images in the translation. A specimen of such a description with added gleam is quoted below, along-side the original lines.

evan sanmihayan viṣṇum vimohan viśvamohanam | svayaiva mayayājō'pi svayameva vimohitaḥ || tamyām tamovannaihāram khadyotarccirivahani | mahatītaramayaiśyam nihantyātmani yuñjataḥ ||

- 10/13/44-45.

(Thus trying to enchant or bewilder Viṣṇu who is devoid of all ignorance or illusion, but on the contrary keeps the world in illusion, the creator Brahmā got himself puzzled and bewildered by his own magical or illusory power. O King, just as a few atoms of fog cannot envelop the darkness of the night but rather got itself enveloped by the latter; just as the gleam of fire-flies cannot express itself in the broad daylight, because of the powerful rays of the sun, similarly an attempt to outwit a greater personality by a lesser one reacts upon the latter adversely.)

The Assamese version runs thus:-

eko sāra nisāra napānta mane guṇi. |
Kṛṣṇaka mohante moha bhailanta āpuni || niśabada vidhi buddhi smiriti tuṭila āpōnāra śare yena āpuni phuṭila ||
mahantaka māyā kari āponāka nāśe |
Sūrya āge yena jui-āngni prakāśe ||
Sāgarara āge kṣudra nadī kare caṭi |
bāḍaba agnira āge yena phiringati ||
pracaṇḍa vāyuka rodhe śimalura tulā |
Meru parvatara āge yena ūiculā ||
Muṣalara āge daṇḍi kare uḍuphāli |
siṃhara āgata yena muṣe mele tāli ||
sehi mate Brahmā māyā kariyā Kṛṣṇata |
bhailanta āpuni pāce smṛti buddhi hata ||

(Trying to outwit Kṛṣṇa, Brahmā himself became bewildered. He could not make out what was real and what was unreal. The intellect and memory having failed, the creator was at a loss; words failed him. He was as it were pierced by his own arrows. He undid himself by attempting to deceive the Great One. Like a piece of tiny burning fagot trying to outshine the midday sun, like a streamlet trying to outbid the mighty ocean, like a piece of cotton trying to prevent a heavy gale, like a tiny spark before a wild fire, like an ant-hill before the Meru mountain, like a small stick trying to outmanœuvre a heavy cudgel and lastly like a mouse trying to rend a patch in the very presence of a lion, Brahmā similarly attempting to overpower Kriṣṇa by his māyā, himself bewildered and stupefied lost his memory and intellect.)

The childish pranks of Kṛṣṇa with his mother and playmates the frightful image of Kāli-nāga, the allegorical description of the beauty of the rainy and autumnal seasons, the portrayal of the erotic dalliance of Kṛṣṇa with the milk-maids and the latter's intense grief at separation from the beloved one, are some of the rare gems of early Assamese literature, which speak of the genius of the translator.

Madhya-Dāśama and Śeṣa-Daśama, i.e., the middle and last portions of Bhāgavata are the productions of Ananta Kandali. The incidents narrated in chapters 48-81 of the original Book come within the scope of Madhya-Daśama and the contents of the remaining chapters come within the purview of Śeṣa-Daśama. In the concluding lines of Śeṣa-Daśama, Ananta Kandali gratefully remembers Śankaradeva, who was no more in this world when he completed this work.

āchila kāyastha Kṛṣṇa-kiṅkara Saṅkara |
teho Bhāgavata-kathā racilā sundara ||
yāta hante bhailā Kṛṣṇa kathāra prasiddhi |
jānileka loke bhakatise nava nidhi ||
siṭo mahantara kata kahibo mahata |
yāra Kṛṣṇa kathā gite vyāpile jagata ||
nāmata kāyastha mahā Harita bhakata |
Kṛṣṇa smari mari sthita bhailā Vaikunṭḥata ||

(There was a servant of Kṛṣṇa, Kāyastha in origin, Śaṅkara by name. He composed in beautiful verses the legends of Bhāgavata and from whom the deeds of Kṛṣṇa became popular, and the people became aware of the inestimable value of Bhakti. How can I express the greatness of that noble one whose songs and compositions spread far and wide? Kāyastha in name only, he was a great devotee of Kṛṣṇa and meditating on Hari breathed his last.)

Sankaradeva died in 1568 A.D. and hence Ananta Kandali must have finished his work in the latter part of the 16th century. The immediate inspiration and help for composing the Bhāgavata came from one influential man of Hājo, Kusuma Dalai by name, whom the poet has described as the 'servant of Keśava' and his relation with the pious beings was like the relation of the full-moon to lilies.

Ananta Kandali also followed Sankaradeva's method of translation. A few examples of his deviations and elucidations are noted. The story of Revati's marriage with Balarama is narrated in the 9th Book of the Sanskrit Bhagavata. It does not form a part of Book X. But Ananta Kandali in course of his narration of the different marriages of Krsna describes the marriage of Revati with Balarama also. The Rukmini-parinaya episode of Ananta Kandali narrated in chapters 52-54 of the tenth canto bears certain influences of Sankaradeva's Rukminiharana Kavya where certain elements from the Harivamsa are introduced. The birth of Pradyumna which immediately follows the narration of Rukmini's marriage in the original source, has been pushed back to a subsequent place instead of immediately describing it after Rukmini's marriage. The language and narration of his Syamantaharana episode has also a certain resemblance with Sankaradeva's description in Kirtana. In the Pārijātaharana episode the poet following Harivamsa introduces war between Indra and Krsna singularly absent in Bhagavata Purana. Then again in his treatment of the Usa-harana episode the poet takes recourse to Harivamsa by introducing Nārada, who initiates Citralekhā into the mystery of a magic by practising which she could fetch Aniruddha from the well-guarded city of Dvārakā unobserved. In the translation of the Rajasuya episode (original 10/70-75), Ananta Kandali, freely introduces descriptions from the Mahābhārata described in the Sabha-Parva. The description of the procession of Yadavas from Dvaraka to Indraprastha, the decoration in the city of Indraprastha to receive Krsna, words exchanged between Krsna and Jarasandha on the eve of the battle, the detailed descriptions of the rituals of the Rajasuya sacrifice, the birth story of Jarasandha, Sisupāla's vulgar and uncontrolled words against Krsna during the sacrifices, are some of the incidents where Ananta Kandali deviating a little from Bhāgavata introduces his own elements as well as from the Mahabharata.

Seşa-Daśama of Assamese poets includes the last nine chapters (82-90) of the original Bhāgavata, of which, the incidents narrated in chapters 82-85 dealing with Kṛṣṇa's pilgrimage to Kuruksetra, his reunion with Nanda and Yasoda there, the description by the wives of Krsna about their respective marriages and the recall of Daivaki's seven dead sons from the nether region by Krsna and Balarama, are collectively known as Kuruksetra. The extant Kuruksetra is the composition of Sankaradeva. It is generally supposed that Ananta Kandali being aware of this work of Sankaradeva left it out of his scheme of translation. Nowhere in the published Kurukşetra portion of Assamese Bhāgavata, the name of Sankaradeva appears, only his usual epithet Krsnara kinkara, expressive of his humility appears in two places. On the other hand it will be a wrong supposition if we consider that Ananta Kandali dropped this episode from his scheme of translation only because Sankaradeva had handled it previously. In that case he would have avoided many other episodes treated by Sankaradeva, Tradition supported by medieval hagiographies speaks that Ananta Kandali translated entirely the second and the third part of Book X. Most probably Ananta Kandali's translation of this part of Bhāgavata went out of vogue because of the popularity of Sankaradeva's version. The extant and published Kuruksetra episode deals in greater length the contents of chapter 83 of the original version. Here several wives of Krspa have narrated their marriage episodes in the presence of Draupadi and other women of the Kuru dynasty. But the next few chapters (chapters 86-90) have been translated by Ananta Kandali. In the Subhadraharana episode he again freely introduces incidents and descriptions from the Adi-Parva of the Mahabharata.

There is one more metrical version of Book X, composed by Pītāmbara Dvija in the middle part of the sixteenth century. The Pītāmbara translated this part of the Bhāgavata at the instance and under the patronage of Prince Samara Sinha, son of king Viśwasinha of Koc-Behār. Prince Samara Sinha was no other than Sukladhvaja who secured that title on account of his martial qualities. Prince Sukladhvaja, the patron of the poet, died near about 1570 A.D.; it seems therefore this work must have been begun before the above date. Early Assamese hagiographies make mention of Pītāmbara as a contemporary poet of Sankaradeva. He was a resident of Kamatāpur, within the state of modern Cooch Behar. Pitāmbara's version of Book X never came to be popular in Assam, because of the existence of Sankaradeva's version.

^{17.} Ms. No. 58, Cooch-Behar State Library (Assamese and Bengali Section).

Book XI.—Book XI consisting of thirty-one chapters describes mainly the self-destruction of the Yadavas, discourses between Krsna and Uddhava on religious and philosophical topics, and Krsna's death. Sankaradeva has translated chapters 1-7, 10-13, 29-31 in toto without any omission, while chapters 8, 9, 14-28 have been practically omitted. These chapters contain discussions on various topics which are not in conformity with the Bhakti cult preached by Sankaradeva. For instance, discourses on Samkhya, Yoga, Dhyana, Samnyasa and Karma described in the above chapters are useless from the point of view of a Vaisnavite reformer and hence these chapters have been practically left untranslated. On the other hand there are certain matters in the Assamese version which we do not find in the Sanskrit original. In the Sanskrit version Book XI concludes with the death of Krsna and the subsequent events regarding his wives and parents are not related there. The Assamese version relates in detail the grief of Arjuna when he comes to rescue from the flood-affected city of Dwaraka the old and infirm men and women, the death rites performed by the wives of the Yadavas at Prabhasa, the forcible abduction of the wives of Krsna by the uncivilized cowherds from the protection of Arjuna, sorrows of the Pandayas hearing of the fate of the Yadavas and their last journey to heaven, the meeting of Uddhava and Vidura on the banks of the Yamuna and the latters' journey to Badarikāśrama with Gāndhārī and Dhṛtarāstra to meet Maitreva as suggested by Krsna before his death. These subsequent events are taken from Book I/13 and III/1-5 and have been incorporated here to give a complete history of the Yadavas and their relatives, so that nothing may be left to the imagination of the readers about their ultimate fate. The forcible abduction of the wives of Krsna by the Abhīras and the self-immolation of the former are inserted perhaps from the Musala-Parva of the Mahābhārata.

Sankaradeva's translation of the first chapter of this Book is more graphic and vivid. A beautiful specimen for proper appreciation is given below side by side with the original slokas from Bhāgavata:

te veşayitvā strīvešaih Sāmbam Jāmbavatīsutam | esă prechati vo vipră antarvatnyasiteksană ||

prastum vilajjatī sāksāt prabrūtamoghadarsanāḥ | prasosyantī putrakāmā kimsvit sañjanayisyati || evam pralabddhā munayastānūcuḥ kupitā nṛpa janayisyati vo mandā muṣalaṃ kulanāsanaṃ ||

- 11/1/15-16.

(Having bedecked Sāmba the son of Jāmbavatī with womanly garb they (Yādavas) approached the sages and asked, "O Brahmans, you who are endowed with true vision please tell this pregnant black-eyed lady who in spite of her intense desire, feels certain delicacy to ask whether she would give birth to a male or a female child." The sages being enraged at this cunning behaviour told them that she would bring forth a pestle which would bring destruction to their family).

Sankaradeva paints this incident more realistically and vividly by introducing popular elements into it:

> Jāmbavatī-suta Sāmba nāme kumāraka strī kāce kacāi mandileka śarīraka pindhāilā pravandhe dhari divya neta śārī | bāndhilā ucchala khopā puspacaya āri jvalai gandasthale cāru karņara kundale | hātata balayā śānkha sātesarī gale || kankālata mekhalā unnata stanabhāra | ophandāiļā peta garbhāvatīra ākāra || šikhata sindura pāve pindhāilā nūpura saghane bhojana kare tämbula karpura madhya kari yāi yata yādava kumāra hānthibāka napāre garbhara yena bhāra || māthāta odanī atišaya lajjāvatī | lahu lahu gamana gambhīra gajagati || katāksa nayane cāve kari lavalāsa || katoksane pāila rsi samajyāra pāśa || nāhi hāsi rasa yena save suvinīta | jānu šire praņāmilā pariyā bhūmita | pranamiya garbhavati parama hutaśe | māthāta odanī laiyā railā ekapāśe || pāce Yadugana avanata kari kāya karayode bole rsi samajyāka cāi

tumi save mahā mahā muni sarvajān |
cāri veda caudha śāstra karichā vyākhyān ||
dekhiyoka iţo strī āsi āche kāje |
āpuni nosodhe kathā tomāsāta lāje ||
sodhāve āmāra mukhe śuniyo samprati |
pūrņa daśa māsa iţo nārī garbhāvatī ||
upajive śiśu kivā kahio bicāri |
putra abhilāse tomāsāta sodhe nārī ||
kivā haibe putra kivā jīu haibe jāta |
gaņi padhi ṛṣisava kahiyo āmāta ||

(Prince Samba the son of Jambavatī having been dressed with womanly garb, was further decorated in his person in the fashion of a girl. He was made to put on a beautiful silken sari and his artificial braided knots of hair were decorated with flowers. His cheeks were adorned with beautiful ear-rings hanging from the ears, his hands and neck were adorned with bangles and necklaces. He was attired with a mekhalā and had protruding breasts. The abdominal portion was made to look like that of a pregnant woman. He had vermilion marks on the parting of his hair and anklets in his feet. He was constantly chewing betelnuts, walked with a leisurely gait, due to the pressure of the womb, as it were, amongst the princes of the Yadava clan. With a veil over the head he feigned delicacy befitting a woman, and walked with a slow gait. After sometime, they reached the assembly of sages. Casting aside light-heartedness and with due humility they saluted the sages with bended knees. The pregnant woman also after due salutation stood aside with her veil drawn. Then the princes with bended body and folded hands began to address the assembly of sages in the following way: "You are all great and omniscient sages and you have interpreted and explained the four Vedas and fourteen scriptures. Behold, there is a woman, who though eager to know, yet out of womanly modesty has not ventured to ask you what she intends to know. She is carrying a child of ten months in her womb and is desirous to know the sex of the child she is carrying. Kindly let us know whether she would give birth to a male or a female child.")

The specimen will show to what an extent popular touches were introduced to enliven the descriptions.

The Assamese translation of the second to the fifth chapter of Book XI is known as Nimi-Navasiddha Samvād, and has been popularly treated as a separate work, at it were. The reason for assigning it a separate and independent place is the predominance of the elements of Bhakti illustrated through the discourses between King Nimi and nine saintly sons of Rsava.

Book XII.—The twelfth Book comprising thirteen chapters of various topics, including the genealogy of the Lunar race, the duties to be observed in different ages, the origin and classification of the Vedas and the puranas, the description of Vyūhas, the number of slokas in various puranas and a short review of Bhāgavata as a purana by way of retrospect.

It is translated into Assamese by Śańkaradeva and like the two previous Books most probably composed between 1550 and 1568 A.D. Chapters 1, 7, 11 and 13 of the original text has been omitted in the Assamese version. So far as the translation of other chapters are concerned, there is a slight deviation in the case of the 5th chapter. In this chapter the death of Parīkṣita by snake-bite has been described, and in course of this description, the conflict between Kāṣ́yapa, a Brahman physician, expert in curing snake-bite, and Takṣaka a dreadful serpent, is narrated in details, probably taken from the Mahābhārata (Ādi-Parva). The conflict is hinted at in Bhāgavata, but the details are lacking.

Lastly, Sankaradeva seems to have avoided purposely the description of the Caturvyūhas (Chapter 11) as the Vyūhas have no place in the theology of Assamese Vaiṣṇavism, and facts narrated in other omitted chapters are also unnecessary from the point of view of the Vaiṣṇavite reformer.

II. Kathā-Bhāgavata:

In the preceding sections we have discussed about the metrical version of Bhāgavata Purāṇa. There is another important version in prose written in the sixteenth century. Prose as the medium of literary expression is rarely to be found in the medieval religious literature of India. But in Assam prose is being used as the medium of literary expression, consistently and continuously from the sixteenth century onwards. Kathā-Bhāgavata or the Bhāgavata in prose is the pioneering work in this respect. In Assamese popularly Kathā means speech whereas in Sanskrit it means a story written in prose. Any work written in the syntax of the ordinary speech was termed Kathā in Assamese. 18 ^{18.} In Jain literature also, prose works are termed Kathas.

The founder of Assamese prose literature is Bhattadeva, who by his prose translations of Bhagavata Purana, Bhagavata Gita. and Ratnavali payed the way for the future development of religious prose in Assam. Bhattadeva's real name was Vaikuntanatha Kaviratna Bhagavata Bhattacarya. He was born about the year 1558 A.D. and died towards the fourth decade of the seventeenth century. He was the most devoted disciple of Damodaradeva, the founder of the Damodari sub-sect of Assamese Vaisnavism. Bhattadeva was a renowned Sanskrit scholar and has left a Sanskrit work called Bhakti-Viveka on the doctrines of Bhakti, besides a few other works in Assamese prose and poetry. Prose translations of Bhāgavata Purāna, Gītā and Ratnāvalī were made by him at the request of Damodaradeva, his spiritual guide. The work of translating Bhāgavata was begun in 1593 A.D. and finished in 1597 A.D.

The prose employed by Bhattadeva in his translation of Bhagavata is not the spoken language of the time. It is an artificial literary language, being a blending of spoken and artificial forms. similar to the language employed in the metrical translations. The diction is overloaded with Sanskrit words and the language is far less homely and occassionally verges to the point of obscurity. But considering the nature of the work and the absence of a model prose before him Bhattadeva's pioneer attempt cannot but be admired. Though his language is marked by the predominance of Sanskrit words, yet he tried his best to make his sentences simple in construction avoiding complex or compound sentences as far as possible. The sentences of Kathā-Bhāgavata are not only wellbalanced but rhythmic as well.

Kathā-Bhāgavata is the product of the one single writer, as such its treatment is more systematic. Unlike the metrical version where many chapters of the several Books have been omitted, Bhattadeva has not omitted or left out any chapter of the original Sanskrit version. Throughout the entire purana he has followed a summary process of translation by avoiding lengthy details and focusing only on the principal matters. Sanskrit slokas which have incorporated the main contents of each chapter have been faithfully and literally translated, and nowhere extra-devotional elements have been allowed to predominate.

III. Summaries and Gists of Bhagavata Purana:

(a) Kirtana: The most important summary of Bhagavata is Kirtana composed by Sankaradeva in the earlier part of his religious and literary career. According to Daityāri Thākura, the celebrated biographer of Sankaradeva, Kirtana was composed when Śankaradeva was living at Bardowa, where he spent the early part of his life, and hence the date of its composition can be safely placed in the first half of the sixteenth century. Originally Kirtana was not a single book as at present, its different episodes were treated as separate works, having the same style of composition. After the death of Śankaradeva, Mādhavadeva, his favourite desciple with the help of his nephew Ramcarana Thakura collected the different episodes of Kirtana from various places and arranged the different episodes in a systematic order to give the stamp of one book. Thus the present Kirtana is a composite work having several independent episodes. The only connecting link between the different episodes is the style of composition. Kirtana as the very name suggests is written for chanting in the congregational prayer and hence each chapter invariably contains a refrain (Ghoṣā) followed by narrative couplets. The following are the episodes incorporated within Kirtana:

- Caturvimáati avatāra varņaņā (a brief description of the twenty-four incarnations of Nārāyaṇa).
- Nāmāparādha varņanā (offences against chanting the names of Hari).
 - 3. Pāṣaṇḍa mardana (chastisement of heretics).
- Dhyāna varņanā (description of Kṛṣṇa and of the celestial region).
- Ajāmilopākhyāna (the story of Ajāmila from Book VI of Bhāgavata Purāna).
- Prahlāda Caritra (the story of Prahlāda from Book VII of Bhāgavata Purāna).
- Gajendropākhyāna (the story from Book VIII of Bhāgavata Purāna).
- 8. Haramohana (the story from Book VIII of Bhāgavata Purāṇa).
- 9. Bali-chalana (the story from Book VIII of Bhāgavata Purāṇa).
- Šiśulīlā (early exploits of Kṛṣṇa from Book X of Bhāgavata Purāṇa).
- Rāsa-Kṛḍā (Kṛṣṇa's dalliance with milkmaids from the 10th Book of Bhāgavata).

278 ASPECTS OF EARLY ASSAMESE LITERATURE

- Kańsa-badha (Killing of Kańsa from 10th Book of Bhāgavata).
- Gopī-Uddhava Samvāda (message of Uddhava to the milkmaids, 10th Book of Bhāgavata).
- Kujīr Bāñcā-puraņa (fulfilment of the hunchbacked girl's desire, 10th Book of Bhāgavata).
- Jarāsandha-Yuddha (From the 10th Book of the Bhāgavata).
- Kāla-yavana Badha (the death of Kālayavana, 10th Book of the Bhāgavata).
- 17. Mucukunda-stuti (Mucukunda's prayer from the 10th Book, Bhāgavata).
- Syamanta-harana (the rape of the Syamanta jewel, 10th Book, Bhāgavata).
- Nāradara Dvārakā-darśana (Narada's visit to Dvārakā, 10th Book, Bhāgavata).
- Vipraputra-ānayana (revival of the dead son of a Brahman, 10th Book, Bhāgavata).
- Vipra Dāmodarākhyāna (story of the Brahman named Damodara; 10th Book of Bhāgavata).
 - 22. Veda-stuti (hymns by the Vedas, 10th Book, Bhāgavata).
- Daivakīr Putra Ānayana (Bringing back to life the dead sons of Daivakī; 10th Book, Bhāgavata).
- 24. Līlā-mālā (a review of the exploits of Kṛṣṇa described in the 10th Book of Bhāgavata).
- Śri-Kṛṣṇar Vaikuṇṭha-prayāṇa (the return of Kṛṣṇa to Vaikuṇṭha; 10th Book Bhāgavata).
- 26. Sahasra-nāma-vṛttānta (the origin and efficacy of the thousand names of Viṣṇu from Padma Purāṇa).
- 27. Oreșā-Varnana (the description of the origin of the Jaganātha temple from Brāhma Purāṇa).
- 28. Ghunucă Kîrtana (the story of Kṛṣṇa's visit to Ghunucă (Guṇḍica), the daughter of Indradyumna, from Jagannātha Purāna).

Excepting (2), (3), (26), (27) and (28), all other episodes are taken from Bhagavata Purana, the second part, viz. Namaparadha Varnana is taken from the Svarga Khanda of Padma Purana and the part three is a gleaning from different sources. The twentysixth (Sahasranāma Vrttānta) and the last part (Ghunucā Kīrtana) are not the compositions of Sankaradeva. Perhaps these were later on incorporated into Kirtana, keeping in view the similarity of form and motif. Sahasra-nāmavrttānta from Padma Purāņa is the composition of Ratnākara Kandali, a Brahmin disciple of Sankaradeva. This part of Ratnakara Kandali like other parts of Kirtana composed by Sankaradeva, is marked by the lucidity and dignity of style. But Ghunuca-Kirtana composed by Śrīdhara Kandali, the celebrated poet of Kānkhowā, lacks the dignity and devotional fervour which characterizes the other parts. and hence it is not considered by the orthodox section of the Vaisnavites as a genuine part of Kirtana. This episode of Visnu visiting the house of Ghunuca, as stated by the writer, is taken from Jagannātha Purāna, perhaps an upapurāna written for popularising the cult of Jagannatha at Puri. This same episode is also found in the Utkala-Khanda of Skanda Purāna. The Oresā Varņana episode of Kirtana composed by Sankaradeva has for its source the chapters 44-51 of Brahma Purāna. It describes the legend about the origin of the Jagannatha temple at Puri. Assamese translation avoids lengthy details of the original as far as possible.

From the above accounts it is clear that Kirtana barring two or three episodes or parts, is a summary, of the principal episodes of Bhāgavata legends. This work of Sankaradeva excels all his other writings in popularity. The loftiness of ideas, the lucidity and dignity of expression and the devotional fervour rank it above all other religious works of the mediaeval period.

(b) Gunamālā: It is a gist of the 10th Book Bhāgavata Purāņa. It enumerates as briefly as possible the principal exploits and deeds of Kṛṣṇa and is intended for daily recitation. In conformity with the littleness of its volume the metre employed here is also of short measures each consisting of six syllables. There is a story narrated in the mediaeval biographies about the origin of this little volume. The Koc King Naranārāyaṇa (C. 1540-1580) one day asked the scholars present in his court to bring the next day an elephant within a small basket. This puzzling behest put the whole band of scholars in bewilderment. Sankaradeva who was also present on that occasion brought the next day a handy gist of the 10th Book of Bhāgavata contained in a small basket with a picture of an elephant painted on the surface. This ingenious device of Sankaradeva greatly pleased the king who thereupon made Sankaradeva the leader of his court-pundits. From the story it can at least be inferred that the work was composed towards the latter half of the sixteenth century.

(c) Bhāgavata-Ratna: It contains the summary of each chapter of Bhāgavata in two or three lines and thus gives in a nut-shell all the legends of Bhāgavata Purāṇa. The poet begins with the legend about the origin of Bhāgavata and then describes Śrīdhara-svāmī's contribution towards the spread of the teachings of the purāṇa.

Kali kāle Śrīdhara Svāmīra prasādata | bidita bhaileka iţo Bhārata madhyata || āno budhagaņe āra tīkāka karilā | Svāmīra tīkāse sarvadeše pracārilā || sehi Svāmīdevara tīkāka anusari | Bhāgavata bakhānanta śankā parihari ||

(Through the grace of Śrīdhara, Bhāgavata became known throughout India. Others have written commentary on it, but only Śrīdhara's commentary found ready acceptance in all countries. Following his commentary Bhāgāvata is being explained without diffidence).

The writer of this gist of Bhāgavata Purāṇa is Viṣṇu-Bhāratī who also translated the episode of Dhruva of Book IV.

(d) Kathā-Sūtra: This work also contains a comprehensive index of the whole of Bhāgavata. It summarizes briefly all the twelve Books and states briefly all the different topics explaining here and there the important and difficult passages and writing notes on such words as are considered to be difficult. It is written in Assamese verse. The author introduces himself as the disciple of Harideva, who was the founder of the Haridevī sub-sect of Assamese Vaiṣṇavism. Bhāgavatācārya by which name the author speaks of himself is most probably his epithet. His father's name was Hari Miśra. In the closing lines of his work he mentions two other works, viz., Sātvatatantra and Gītāsāra, composed by him. Harideva, the spiritual guide of Bhāgavatācārya flourished in the sixteenth century and hence the date of this work may reasonably be placed in the early decades of the seventeenth century.

IV. Kāvyas based on Episodes of Bhāgavata:

The Vaiṣṇavite poets did not remain content with mere translations of the purāṇas, they further developed the interesting episodes into independent and self-contained kāvyas. In the treatment of these episodical kāvyas we find the Vaiṣṇavite poets giving free scope to their imagination. In the portraiture of characters and in the creation of proper setting or back-ground, national traits and local colours were freely introduced with a view to attract the popular mind. The most important kāvyas based on the episodes of Bhāgavata are (1) Rukmiṇ-haraṇa by Śaṅkaradeva, (2) Rājasūya by Mādhavadeva, (3) Kumāra-haraṇa by Ananta Kandali.

(a) Rukmini-harana: It is one of the most widely read kāvyas in Assamese. According to medieval biographies of Śańkaradeva it is written in the early part of his literary life. This statement of the biographies can be support also from the internal evidence of the kāvyas. Here Śańkaradeva describes in detail the history of his family with a certain pride and gusto which we naturally expect from a youthful writer; but in his later works he is very reticent about his personal history. Its style is marked by youthful vitality having a special bias for imaginative details. Considering these its composition may be placed in the first half of the sixteenth century.

Rukmiņī-haraņa Kāvya derives its principal materials from the 52-54 chapters of the Book X of Bhāgavata Purāṇa. Besides the contents of the above chapters certain descriptions from the Rukmiṇī-haraṇa episode of Harivaṇiśā have also been introduced. The influence of Harivaṇiśā may be specially discerned in the description of the coronation ceremony of Kṛṣṇa performed by the king of Kośāmbī to undo the evil design of the assembled kings at Vidarbha who decided not to offer any seat to Kṛṣṇa as he was not a king. These incidents of the coronation of Kṛṣṇa are narrated in the Harivaṇiśā, 2/48-50.

The importance of the kāvya lies in its life-like characters, lively dialogues and brilliant descriptions of various scenes. Assamese life and manners are cleverly reflected in this poetical composition of Śańkaradeva.

(b) Răjasũya Kāvya: Mādhavadeva (1489-1596), the able and faithful disciple of Sankaradeva composed this kāvya mainly deriving his materials from the chapters 70-75 of the 10th Book of the Bhāgavata. He has faithfully followed the sequence of events as described in the above chapters of Bhāgavata. But so far as the details are concerned, the poet has taken recourse to other sources also, the most important of these sources is the Rajasuya episode narrated in the Sabhā Parva of the Mahābhārata. Certain traces of Māgha's Śiśupālā-badha could be discerned in the details of the Rājasūya kāvya. The description of the procession led by Krsna from Dvārakā to Indraprastha, the fight between Bhīma and Jarāsandha, Siśupala's railings against Śrikrsna are some of the best specimens of Mādhavadeva's descriptive genius. But one defect of this kavva is that its plot lacks the unity of impression. There are many descriptions which have no direct connection with the central theme. Of course the poet's aim was not to produce an excellent kāvya, but to illustrate through the medium of the story the main principles of the Vaisnavism. Another cause of the above defects is its faithful adoption of the sequence of events narrated in Bhāgavata.

Most probably this kavya was composed at the inspiration of the Koc king Naranārāyana and his brother Sukladhvaja. The panegyrical lines towards the close of the kavva point to no other conclusion than this, From this panegyric it can be inferred that when this work was finished, Sukladhvaja was then still living. Sukladhvaja died in the neighbourhood of 1570 and Madhavadeva came into contact with the Koc king near about 1560. Therefore this must have been written within these two limits.

(c) Kumara-harana: Another important and highly popular kāvya is Kūmāraharaņa by Ananta Kandali alias Śrī-Candra Bhārati.19 The kāvya describes the romance of Usā and Aniruddha narrated in the chapters 62-63 of the 10th Book. The contents of the above two chapters have been fully developed and illustrated by giving flesh and blood to the none-too-clear characters of the original source by introducing humorous touches, and local colours here and there and lastly by detailing the erotic sentiments of the hero and heroine in union and separation. The date of its composition may be reasonably placed in the latter half of the sixteenth century.

Besides the works discussed above there are a good many early religious dramas where episodes from the Bhagavata have been dramatized. As a separate chapter has been devoted to the discussion of early Assamese dramas, no further discussions on the same topic seem necessary here.

2. VIŞNU-PURĀŅA

Introductory.—The next important purana for the Vaisnavites is Vișnu Purăna. In this purăna, Vișnu is praised and glorified as the highest Being, as the one and only God. It belongs to the Pañcarātra sect and is the best representative of the whole class of sectarian puranas, since it is purely Vaisnava in its teachings from beginning to end. It consists of six sections or Books and the entire purana has been told by Parasara to his pupil Maitreya. Book I gives an account of the creation along with numerous mythological narratives, allegories and legends of ancient kings and sages. Book II gives a fantastic description of the world with seven continents and seven oceans. In this connection the legend of the origin of the name Bhāratavarṣa is described in detail. Next follow the descriptions of heaven, hell and the nether world. Book III gives an account of the Manus (primal ancestors of the human race) and Manvantaras (ages) over which they ruled. Then follows a discussion on the Vedas and their classification by Vyasa and the origin of the various legends connected with the mythical kings. Book V gives a detailed biography of Kṛṣṇa and the last Book by way of prophecy describes the evils of the Kali Yuga and the various dissolutions (Pralaya) of the universe.

It is not possible to assign any definite date of its composition or compilation. C. V. Vaidya and Farquhar endeavour to prove that Viṣṇu Purāna is not earlier than the 9th century A.D. But Dr. Winternitz and following him many other scholars also, are of opinion that it is certainly earlier than the 9th century, but cannot be pushed back beyond the 5th century A.D.

Assamese Versions:

(i) Viṣṇu Purāṇa holds a position of esteem amongst the Vaiṣṇavas of Assam. The first Assamese translation was made in the early decades of the seventeenth century by Bhāgavata Miśra, who also translated into metrical Assamese Sātvata Tantra. Bhāgavata Miśra in the colophone of Sātvata-Tantra introduces himself as the follower of Dāmodaradeva:

> śunā sarvaloka mora nija guru Dāmodara kṛpāmaya | tāhāna mahimā kaiyā napāo sīmā ananta guna ālaya |}

āhileka eka dvija šuddhamati tāna mukhya pāriṣada |

mahā Bhāgavata mahā guņavanta nāhi yāta lobha mada ||

rūpa manohara gaura kalevara sakalo loka rañjana | bhakti pravartāyā dīna daridraka

pālilā yito sajjana ||

(Listen all of you, gracious Dāmodara is my spiritual preceptor. He was the repository of countless virtues — as such I cannot express the depth of his nobility. There was a Brahman of stainless mind, who was his (Dāmodara's) chief attendant. He was a great Bhāgavata having great qualities and devoid of egotism and covetousness. Beautiful, fair in complexion, liked by every body, that noble Brahman preserved the weak and the poor by establishing the path of devotion).

The brief account of the life of Bhagavata Misra as found in the concluding chapter of his Satvata Tantra (verses 372-375) says that Bhagavata Miśra was a disciple of Damodaradeva and used to recite and explain the Bhagavata in the Govindapura Satra of Bhagavanadeva, another prominent disciple of Damodaradeva. According to the medieval biographies of Damodaradeva, Bhagavanadeva was entrusted by the former to propagate Vaisnavism in the northern Kamarupa and accordingly he established himself at a place called Nimiśā. His Satra was named as Govindapura. Bhāgavata Miśra was the Bhāgavatī of that Satra and under the inspiration of Bhagavanadeva he composed several works. In the introduction of the printed Satvata-tantra edited by S. C. Goswami Bhagavata Miśra's real name is given out as Raghunath Miśra and he is described as the brother of Govinda Miśra, the celebrated translator of the Gita into metrical Assamese. But Govinda Miśra and his family belonged to Harideva's sub-sect and not to Damodara's sect. This inconsistancy has not been explained away in the above introduction by the learned writer of the introduction.

It is not definitely known whether Bhagavata Miśra translated the entire Viṣṇu Purāṇa or only a section of it. The published portion of his work in The Typical Selections of Assamese Literature deals with the details of hell, and the Sañjamaṇipura of Yama which is a part of Yama-gītā narrated in the first section of Vişnu Purāna. Bhāgavata Miśra probably composed this work in the first half of the seventeenth century.

- (ii) The second episodical translation of Viṣṇu Purāṇa is Yama-gita by Kālidāsa. Nothing is known about him, nor can the date of the composition be ascertained with any amount of certainty. But this much can be said that it is comparatively a later work. The language bears certain traces of the dialects of the westernmost districts of Assam. Here are described the four gates to hell. Men who are virtuous enter the capital of Yama by the eastern, western and northern gates but those who are vicious enter by the southern gate. Then it enumerates virtues and vices and rewards and punishments of actions. It is a literal translation of the Yama-gītā chapter in the first section of Viṣṇu Purāṇa.
- (iii) A complete translation of Visnu Purāņa with its several sections was made in the first half the nineteenth century by Paraśūrāma Dvija under the inspiration of one Candrasena of Tezpur. The translation was made in 1758 Saka era (1836 A.D.). Parasurama Dvija has left behind him a complete translation of Dharma-Purana, probably an Upapurana of later origin. His translation of Visnu Purana is voluminous and covers the entire episodes and narratives of the original version. His translation is literal and does not contain any deviation from the original, but his style lacks the spontaneity and lucidity of earlier Vaisnavite poets. Unlike the Vaisnavite poet-translators of the earlier period, Parasurama lacks in the power of judicious selection of topics,, as a result his work has not become accessible to the average readers. His language is terse and devoid of any popular touch, the chief attraction of the masses. It appears from the translation that the translator was a scholar, but poet he was not. Inquisitive readers have got to plod their way through none-toointeresting narratives written in an unattractive style. But one important virtue of this work is that it is not a fragmentary or piecemeal translation. This purana preserves the specimen of the language used by the poets of the early nineteenth century, who continued the tradition of the Vaisnavite poets by imitating the latter's language and literary forms though such imitation betrays modernism, off and on, throughout their works.20

Ms. No. 444, Department of Historical and Antiquarian Studies, Gauhati.

3. HARIVAMŚA

Introductory.—Though the orthodox Indian tradition regards Harivamśa as an appendix or supplementary part of the Mahābhārata, yet strictly speaking it is an independent work having all the characteristics of a purāṇa. The connection of Harivaṃśa with the Mahābhārata is purely external and is limited essentially to the fact that the same Vaiśampāyana who is said to have recited the entire Mahābhārata to Janamejaya is also credited as the reciter of Harivaṃśa. Besides this, in a few verses at the beginning and the end the praise of the Mahābhārata including Harivaṃśa has been sung. But as far as the contents are concerned Harivaṃśa has little in common with the Mahābhārata.

Harivamśa consists of three sections. The first entitled Harivamśa-parvan begins in the manner of the purāṇas with an account of the creation and all sorts of mythological legends such as of Dhruva, Vena, Pṛthu. Then it describes the kings and their exploits of the solar dynasty (Sūrya-vaṃśa). Next follows the genealogy of the lunar dynasty (Candra-vaṃśa) with detailed accounts of Pururavas, Nahuṣa and Yayāti. The history of the Yādavas culminating in Vāsudeva-Kṛṣṇa is also narrated.

The second section of Harivamáa entitled Viṣṇu Parvan deals exclusively with Kṛṣṇa and his deeds and exploits similar to Book X of Bhāgavata Purāṇa. Kṛṣṇa is honoured and adored here as the Supreme Being, a full incarnation of Viṣṇu. The third section called Bhaviṣya Parvan is a loose collection of legends and prophesies. Herein are described different creations, the horse sacrifice of Janamejaya, ultimately abandoned; the incarnations of Viṣṇu as a Boar, a Man-lion, and a Dwarf. The slaying of Paundra by Kṛṣṇa and the humiliation of the two Śiva-worshippers Haṃsa and Dimbhaka at the hands of Kṛṣṇa and many other legends common to all purāṇas.

The date of Harivamśa is generally fixed between the 4th century B.C. and 4th century A.D.

Assamese Versions.—Though Harivamśa is held by the Assamese Vaiṣṇavites as one of the sacred scriptures, and though they frequently drew their materials from it, yet a complete translation of it is not found in Assamese. The second section of Harivamśa, viz. Viṣṇu Parvan received exclusive attention from the poets, the other two sections were more or less neglected. As has been already stated Vaiṣṇavite poets on many occasions intermingled the narratives of the Harivaṃśa with that of Bhāgavata Purāṇa and Viṣṇu Purāṇa. The following are the main Assamese translations of Harivaṃśa:

(i) The earliest translation of Harivamśa is Uṣāparinaya (marriage of Uṣā with Aniruddha) kāvya by Pitāmbara Kavi. Pītāmbara Kavi flourished in the early part of the sixteenth century and was a contemporary of Śańkaradeva. Early Assamese hagiographies also make mention of him as the contemporary of poet Śańkaradeva. He was a resident of Kamatāpur, within the district of modern Cooch-Behar in Bengal, and composed this kāyya in the year 1533 A.D. Prince Śukladhvaja, the son of the Kocking Viśva Sińha (1517-1540) has been referred to in his translation of Mārkandeya Purāņa as his patron.

The romantic episode Uṣāpariṇaya is narrated in chapters 116-128 of Viṣṇu-Parvan of Harivaṃśa. Pītāmbara has faithfully translated the important verses of Harivaṃśa keeping intact the sequence of events narrated therein. But the details of the several incidents have been supplied by himself. The predominance of the erotic and other secular elements distinguishes it from other religious kāvyas of the same period. Another important characteristic of this kāvya is that the emotional descriptions have been expressed through songs attuned with classical Rāgas (melodies). There are no less than fourteen songs of such type.

(ii) The next important episodical translation of Harivamśa is Pārijātaharana by Gopālacarana Dvija, whose biographical information has been given in connection with the discussion of the 4th Book of Bhāgavata Purāna. The date of the composition of this work therefore, can be placed in the concluding decades of the sixteenth century.

The work gives an account of the death of Narakāsura, the king of Prāgjyotiṣapura and then it relates how Kṛṣṇa defeating Indra, the Lord of Gods in a battle took away the divine flower plant Pārijata with a view to make it a present to his beloved wife Satyabhāmā. This episode is narrated in the chapters 63-75 of Viṣṇu-Parvan of the original Sanskrit version. Gopālacarana in his translation introduces certain descriptions from Bhāgavata and Viṣṇu Purāṇa. This is evident from the following lines:

eke Harivamśa kathā āti sucarita | Tāte Śrī-Bhāgavata karibo miśrita || Śrī-Viṣṇu Purāṇaka karibo jadita | Tini mili haiba āti svāda biparīta ||

(The stories of the Harivamsa are good by themselves, but then, facts from Śri-Bhāgavata and Visnu Purāna have also been introduced. The three together would certainly create an uncommon flavour).

For the treatment of this episode Gopālacarana is indebted to Sankaradeva to a considerable extent. The secular touch and the characterization of Sankaradeva's drama Pārijātaharana have greatly influenced the descriptions of Gopalacarana Dvija. The quarrel between Satyabhāmā and Śacī narrated by Gopālacarana is nothing but a reproduction of the quarrel described in the drama of Sankaradeva. Assamese writers vulgarized the dignified description of the Sanskrit Purana.

(iii) During the reign of the Ahom king Rajeswarsinha (1751-1769 A.D.) the second section, viz. Visnu-Parvan of Harivamsa was rendered into Assamese by one Kavišekhara Vidyācandra Bhattācārya. The poet acknowledges the patronage of the princess Premada, wife of the prince Caru Simha, son of Rajeśwar Sinha.

The work gives an account of Kṛṣṇa's birth and his subsequent doings and exploits amongst cowherds at Gokula and Vrndavana. But one noticeable feature of the work is the presence of Rādhā as the mistress of Krsna. In the original Sanskrit version, the Rāsa-krīdā of Krsna at Vrndāvana with the milkmaids is described in the twentieth chapter of Visnu Parvan, but the name Rādhā is singularly absent there. The Assamese poet in course of his description of the Rasa-krida episode, narrates the pangs of separation and wistfulness of Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa when they saw each other for the first time. The introduction of Radha as the principal mistress of Krsna, was perhaps done at the influence of Brahmavaivarta Purana which gained popularity in the contemporary Ahom Court.

There is yet one more version of Harivamsa, predominated by the Rādhā-motif, composed by one Bhavānanda, son of Sivānanda. The Bengali recension of this work was published a few years back under the auspices of Dacca University. The language of this work bears the stamp of the dialect of the westernmost districts of Assam.

4. PADMA-PURĀNA

Introductory: The present Padma Purana has come down to us in two distinct recensions-the North Indian and the South Indian. The former recension consists of five Books arranged in the following order: (1) Sṛṣṭi (2) Bhūmi, (3) Svarga, (4) Patāla, (5) Uttara and the South Indian recension contains six Books, viz.

(1) Adi, (2) Bhūmi, (3) Brahma, (4) Pātāla, (5) Sṛṣṭi and (6) Uttara. Padma Purana is a Vaisnavite work. It is a loose compilation, the parts of which belong to different periods; as such a definite period cannot be ascribed to its composition. It is recited by Sūta Ugrasravā. The Srsti Khanda deals with the story of the origin of the Purana, the accounts for the term Padma so called after the lotus in which the God Brahma appears at the creation. After the cosmological and cosmogonical myths are narrated the genealogies of the Solar and the Lunar dynasties have been narrated. It also contains many myths and legends glorifying Visnu and Brahma. One of the principal parts of this Khanda consists of the description of the lake Puskara sacred to Brahmā. The Bhūmi-Khanda, i.e. the section of the earth, gives a description of the earth and contains numerous legends which are intended to prove the sanctity of various tirthas or holy places. Not only sacred places, but persons such as the father, the mother, and the chaste wife can be a tirtha. In this connection the story of the chaste wife Sukala has been narrated in detail. Through the story of Puru and Yayati it has been illustrated how a virtuous man can also be a tirtha. The Svarga-Khanda or the section of the heavens gives descriptions of the various worlds of the gods. In course of these descriptions, the legends of Dusvanta and Sakuntala and of Pururava and Urvasi have been narrated. It contains instructions about duties of castes and of the asramas, about the modes of Visnu-worship. The Pātāla Khanda, i.e., the section of the nether world describes the subterranean regions particularly the Nagaloka. A few chapters dwell upon the Rādhā-Krsna legends and also upon the Visnu-cult and the sanctity of the Sālagrāma stone. The Uttara-Khanda, i.e., the last section mainly illustrates and describes various ceremonies and rituals, connected with the Visnucult. It enumerates various observances to be performed in the months specially Magha and Kartika, sacred to Visnu. There is an appendix to the Uttara-Khanda known as Kriyayogasara. The main thesis of this part is that Visnu should be worshipped not by meditation but by pious acts and pilgrimages to sacred places and rivers and by celebration of Vaisnavite festivals.

In the Southern recensions there are two more sections viz. the Adi-Khanda and the Brahma-Khanda. But the contents of these sections do not differ materially from that of the Svarga-Khanda of the Northern recension. In fact the Svarga-Khanda of the Northern recension is nothing but a combination of the Adi and the Brahma-Khanda of the Southern recension, with slight variations here and there.

Assamese Versions:

I. The earliest Assamese translations of Padma Purāņa are a few chapters in Kīrtana. They are Nāmāparādha Varņanā by Sankaradeva and Sahasranāma Vrītūnta by Ratnākara Kandali, a contemporary of Sankaradeva. The former is taken from the Svarga-Khanḍa and the latter has for its source the Uttara-Khanḍa of Padma Purāṇa. These two fragmentary translations belong unmistakeably to the first half of the sixteenth century.

II. In the Descriptive Catalogue of Assamese Manuscripts by H. C. Goswami, a prose translation of some chapters of the Uttara-Khanda has been referred to. The contents of this translation have also been given in the above work. The following contents as given in the work will give an idea of the scope:

"It describes the benefits of wearing strings of Rudrākṣa beads, and of offering Tulsī leaves to God, of venerating the cow, of respecting Pipal tree and of bathing in the Brahmaputra river. The merits of observing fasts during Ekādasī and Janmāṣṭamī is then described. Then follows a description of the terrible journey of a sinner to hell. It then states the effect of taking in the early hours of the morning. In the month of Kārtīka, every evening men should offer lights in the sky as well as in the front of the sacred Tulsī plant. Then there is a description of Jagannāth at Puri. Next follows the description of a godly man and an ideal king. The process of meditation, the mystic effect of uttering the names of Hari, the religious duties to be perfomed every month bring the work to its conclusion."

As mentioned above the work is written in Assamese prose. The language is dignified without being artificial like that of Kathā-Bhāgavata. Probably it is work of the eighteenth century. No mention of the writer is to be found anywhere of the work.

III. The next important translation of Padma Purāṇa is the Mādhava-Sulocanā episode narrated in the fifth chapter of Kriyā-yogasāra appended to the Uttara-khanda. The story is narrated with a view to show the merits of bathing in Gangā-Sāgara Saṇgama. It is a romantic story describing the love of a pair of lovers Mādhāva and Sulocanā through many a vicissitude until they united, and finally get salvation by bathing in the confluence of the Ganges and observing pious vows. The work is a faithful rendering of the original version. Even the imagery and descriptions, and alankāras of the original version have been retained in the As-samese translation as far as practicable. It is written in the style of Kīrtanā by Sankaradeva.

The translator of this romantic story has introduced himself in every colophon as Dvijabara. It is certainly not his name. Most probably this Dvijabara is no other than Kavirāja Cakravarti, the court-poet of the Åhom king Rudrasinha (1696-1712 A.D.). Kavirāja Cakravarti has also introduced himself as Dvijabara in all the colophons of his Gīta-Govinda. There is one more Assamese version of the same episode supposed to be written by one Śiva Śarma.

IV. There are two more works popularly known as Svarga-Khanda, composed by one Sārbabhauma Bhāttācaryya. One is called Saru-Svarga-Khanda, i.e., the lesser Svarga-Khanda, and the other is Brhat-Svarga Khanda, i.e., the greater Svarga-Khanda. Both these works are not in any way connected with Padma Purāṇa, but are biographical accounts of Sankaradeva in the form of prophesies.

BRAHMAVAIVARTA PURĂNA

Introductory: Brahmavaivarta Purana is considered to be one of the latest of the extant puranas. The nucleus of this purana may be very old but the purana in its present form is not earlier than the 10th century. It consists of four parts, viz. (1) Brahma Khanda, (ii) Prakrti-Khanda, (iii) Ganapati-Khanda, and (iv) Krsna-janma Khanda. The first Book deals with the creation by Brahman, the first Being who is no other than Kṛṣṇa. The second Book the Prakrti-Khanda deals with Prakrti the original matter, which resolved itself at the command of Kṛṣṇa into five goddesses (Durgā, Lakṣmī, Sarasvatī, Sāvitrī and Rādhā). The third Book, the Ganapati-Khanda relates the legends of the elephant-headed god Ganesa. The fourth and the most extensive Book the Krsnajanma-khanda deals not only with the birth of Krsna but with the entire life of Kṛṣṇa. It lays special stress on the amorous dalliance of Krsna with the milkmaids, of whom Rādhā, being Krsna's energy, stands foremost. In this purana Kṛṣṇa has been depicted as the god of gods, he is even greater than Visnu.

Assamese Versions:

I. It has already been remarked in the general observation on the puranic literature in Assamese that with the change of the literary centre from Koc Behar to the Ahom court in the beginning of the 18th century, the tone of Assamese literature also underwent a change. Books with the predominance of the erotic sentiment came to attract more and more attention. As a result, Brahmavaivarta Purāna having erotic predominance was translated for the first time. The first Assamese translation of Brahmavaivarta Purāna was undertaken by Kavirāja Cakravarti under the orders of the Ahom King Siva-Simha (1714-1744 A.D.) and his queen Pramatheśwari, also known as Ratnakāntī. Kavirāja Cakravarti was the court-poet of three successive Ahom monarchs and his real name was Rāmanārāyaṇa Cakravarti. He composed a few more works of which Sakuntalā Kāvya, Samkhacūda-badha, and Gītagovinda are noteworthy.

Kavirāja Cakravarti's work is not a complete translation of Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa, it is the last but nevertheless the most important part of the Purāṇa. It gives a faithful rendering of all the important episodes of Kṛṣṇa's early life described in Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa. He vividly describes the Rāsakrīḍā episode with all its erotic descriptions and suggestions. One noticeable feature of his translation is that it is too faithful to the original without a slightest variation. But too much adherence to the original narration has not however deprived it of literary beauty. The work ends with usual panegerical lines in favour of king Siva-Siṇha and his queen.

II. There is another version of the Kṛṣṇajanma Khaṇḍa written towards the latter part of the eighteenth century.²¹ The translator's name is Balarāma Dvija who was seventh in descent from Hari-Bhāratī a contemporary of Vainšī Gopāladeva (1548-1662?). His family originally hailed from Hābung, somewhere in the North-Lakhimpur district of eastern Assam.

This work of Balarāma Dvija is a translation of chapters 83-110 of the Sanskrit version, and as such it is not a complete translation of the entire Kṛṣṇa-Janma Khaṇḍa. It gives a description of heavenly abode of Kṛṣṇa and then recounts why it was necessary for the Lord to take his birth in this world. It describes the duties of four castes, āśramas, preceptors, householders, widows, etc. Then it narrates a few episodes of Kṛṣṇa's life from his upanayana ceremony till the conclusion of his marriage with Rukmiṇī.

Balarama Dvija's translation is literal, but his grasp over the language seems to be limited.

21. This work was published by the Assam Sahitya Sabha, but the chapters have not been properly arranged, in conformity with the original text.

(III) There is a translation of the Prakṛti-Khaṇḍa by Durgeśwar Dvija who was one of the court-poets of one of the later Ahom kings. The following colophon speaks of his connection with the Ahom court —

Indra-vamšī nṛpatira Sabhāra pandita dhīra
Devagrāme yāra vāsabarī |

yāhāra uparī vamša Kaušika munira amša Sadāšiva daula adhikārī

siţo dvija Durgeśvare ehi chabi-Chanda kare Purāṇara artha anusari |

(Durgeśvara Dvija, who is a court-poet of the king, sprung from the dynasty of Indra, who has his abode at Devagrāma and whose ancestors of the Kauśika-gotra were in charge of the temple of Siva at Devagrāma, composes this work in conformity with the meaning of the purāṇa.)

It is not definitely known which of the Ahom kings patronized Durgeśvara. The temple of Śiva at Devagrāma was first constructed by Pratāp Simha in the seventeenth century and in the later-half of the eighteenth century Rājeśvara Simha built another Śiva temple at Negheriting a few miles from Devagrāma. Bhūdhar Agamācārya, the ancestor of Durgeśvara was brought from Kanauj by Pratāp Simha to be in charge of the temple dedicated to Śiva at Devagrāma. Durgeśvara Dvija most probably flourished during the reign of Śiva or Rājeśwar Simha.

Durgesvara was a scholar of repute. He has admirably translated the Sanskrit verses without reducing the literary flavour of the original poetic description. He seems to have wonderful command over language and vocabulary. A comparative study of his translation with the original Sanskrit version will convince the readers about his scholarship and poetical genius. The work begins with the description of the origin of principal goddesses who have been described as embodiments of different aspects of Kṛṣṇa's energy and ends with the death of Saṃkhacūḍa, the husband of Tulasī.²²

(IV) The episode of Samkhacūda and Tulasī of Prakṛti-Khaṇḍa has been dealt with also by Kavirāja Cakravarti the court-poet of Sivasimha. The poet expresses his indebtedness to the king and his queen in the following panegyrical lines:

Saomāra pīṭhara Siva Simha mahāmati |
Hari Hara caraṇata sadā yāra mati "

tāhāna āchilā jāyā Phuleśvarī nāmā |
patnīgaṇa madhye śreṣṭha guṇe anupāma ||
hena nṛpa mahiṣīra ājñā śire dhari |
Kavirāja Cakravartī mati anusari ||
parama sundara Brahma-vaivarta Purāṇa |
Vyāsadeve bāndhi āche ñanā upākhyāna ||

(The noble-minded king Siva Simha of Saumāra Pītha, whose heart was constantly at the feet of Hari and Hara, had a wife Phulesvari by name. She was the greatest of the king's consorts by virtue of her admirable qualities. Under the orders of such a royal couple, Kavirāja-Cakravarti has translated this episode from Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa composed by Vyāsa, according to his capacity).

Like his previous translation of Kṛṣṇa-janma Khanda this work of Kavirāja Cakravarti cannot claim any originality. It is a faithful and more or less literal translation of the Sanskrit version. The work begins with the birth of Tulasī and then gives a detailed account of her marriage with Samkhacūda the demon king and the exploits of the latter. The rape of Tulasī by Kṛṣṇa, the fight between Samkhacūda and Mahādeva and the ultimate death of Samkhacūda and his metamorphosis into a conch-shell, all these incidents have been described in detail, without deviating from the original source.

(V) A complete translation of the entire Brahmavaivarta Purāṇā was accomplished in the first-half of the nineteenth century. It is a joint-product of four scholars engaged by Prince Hayanārāyaṇa of Darrang. But the three-fourths of the work was done by Ratikānta Dvija alone and the remaining one-fourth was contributed by Nandeśvar Dvija, Narottama Dvija and Khargeśvara Dvija. Ratikānta alone translated the Brahma-khaṇḍa, Gaṇapati khaṇḍa, Prakrti khaṇḍa and some portions of the Kṛṣṇa-janma khaṇḍa also. The entire work contains nearly five thousand padas (couplets), and was completed in 1717 (Saka era). The poet speaks of his patron king in the following colophon:

Šiva-vīrya Viśva Simha bhailā sat-rājā | putravate pālilanta tāna nija prajā || tāna putra Malladeva pradhāna nṛpati Bhāratara kichu pada teho karāilanta || tāna vaṃśe Hayanārāyana nṛpabara | mahā dānī mānī rājā Nārāyanapara || tehe ājñā karilanta pada bhāngibāka | pada bhaile bujibeka yata prajājāka ||

(The noble king Viśva Siṃha, son of Siva ruled his subjects like his own sons. His son Malladeva, the greatest of kings had translated some verses of the Mahābhārata. Of his dynasty the honoured king Hayanārāyaṇa, a great devotee of Nārāyaṇa, ordered to translate the Purānic verses so that illiterate persons could understand the implications of sacred texts.)

This is perhaps the latest Assamese translation written in the old traditional style. It marks the last limit of the period of puranic translations inspired by royal patrons. It appears from the published pieces of the work that the translators faithfully followed the original Sanskrit texts.

Ratikānta Dvija is credited with another work, viz. Darrang Raj-Vaṃśāvalī i.e., the chronology of the kings of Darrang.

One Yasodhara Dvija translated a few chapters from the Prakṛṭi Khaṇḍa dealing with the legend of Manasā Devi. It was completed in 1739 (Saka era).

6. MARKANDEYA PURANA

Introductory.—Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa is considered to be one of the earliest purāṇas. "Special evidence for the great antiquity of those sections which contain the old purāṇa is found in the circumstances that in them neither Viṣṇu nor Siva occupies a prominent place, that, on the other hand Indra and Brahman are much in the foreground and that the ancient deities of the Veda, Agni, Sūrya are glorified by hymns in a few chapters, and that a large number of Sun-myths are related" The oldest part of the purāṇa, according to Pargiter may belong to the third century A.D. or even earlier.

The purana actually commences with Jaimini, a pupil of Vyasa, who approached Markandeya asking him for the answers of a few questions which the Mahābhārata left unanswered. Mārkandeya however did not answer these questions, but referred him to four wise birds (dharma-pakṣī). These four wise birds tell a series of legends in reply to Jaimini's questions. In course of their reply to questions put by Jaimini, the wise birds narrate the story of king Hariścandra, and of the noble king Vipaścit (the wise) whose mere presence in the hell releases the sinners, and of the chaste woman Anasūyā, who by the force of chastity caused the sun not to rise, and many such legends.

A work complete in itself was inserted later on into Mārkandeya Purāņa is the Devīmāhātmya section, i.e. the glorification of the goddess Durgā. This purāņa takes its name from the ancient sage Mārkandeya who is credited with manifesting it for the first time.

Assamese Versions:

(i) Hariścandra Upākhyāna by Śankaradeva is the earliest translation of this purāna. According to biographies of Śankaradeva, the translation of this episode of Mārkandeya Purāna is the earliest literary attempt of the great poet-reformer. It is difficult to assign an exact date to its composition, but it can be said with some amount of certainty that this work was composed between the last two decades of the fifteenth century and the first two decades of the sixteenth century A.D.

This episode of king Hariścandra, who being unable to fulfil his avowed promise of gift suffered endless sorrow and humiliation at the hand of Viśvāmitra, until his final salvation, has been narrated in the chapters 7 and 8. In the 9th chapter of this purana, has been narrated the fight between Vasistha and Viśvamitra who assuming themselves forms of a wild duck and a crane fought with great vehemence. Sankaradeva has not only translated the story of Hariscandra narrated in the 7th and 8th chapters, but he appended to his work the contents of the 9th chapter also, though there is no poetical justice in introducing the narration of that chapter. Sankaradeva seems to take a wide latitude in his translation of those chapters. In depicting various incidents, situations and characters Sankaradeva is seen to introduce his own elements in order to give realistic touches. But so far as the plot development is concerned he has not introduced any new incident.

- (ii) Mārkandeya Candī by Pītāmbara Kavi is another episodical translation of this purāṇa. Pītāmbara was a contemporary poet of Sankaradeva. He composed this work in 1602 A.D. (1524 Saka) under the inspiration of Prince Samara Sinha is no other than Prince Sukladhvaja, popularly known as Cilārāi. Prince Sukladhvaja the patron of the poet died in 1570 A.D.; it seems therefore that the composition of Mārkandeya Purāṇa was begun by the poet sometime about the year 1570 and it could be finished after an interval of thirty years. "Pītāmbara's work is a free translation of the Sanskrit Mārkandeya Candī dealing with the episodes of the Goddess Candī's war with the demons and the destruction of the latter."24
- (iii) The Mārkandeya Caṇḍi episode was translated by three more poets towards the latter half of the eighteenth century. The first and foremost of these three versions is by Rucinātha Kandali, who flourished during the reign of Rājeśvar Simha (1751-1749). He was sixth in descent from Ratna Kandali who lived at Nārāyaṇ-pura of North Lakhimpur Sub-Division. Rucinātha's father Kṛṣṇācārya established himself at Sibsagar under the patronage of king Rudra Simha. It is stated in one of the colophons that he translated Kalki Purāṇa into Assamese before he undertook the task of translating this episode of Mārkaṇdeya Purāṇa.

Rucināthā takes the help of (i) Kālikā Purāṇa, (ii) Vāmana Purāṇa, and (iii) Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa (Prakṛti Khaṇḍa) to fulfil the gaps or deficiencies, in the story narrated in Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa. From Kālikā Purāṇa the poet has narrated the legends about the birth of the goddess Durga, and the sacrifices of Dakṣa. From the same Purāṇa have been incorporated the legends of three incarnations of Devi, viz., Ugracaṇḍā, Bhadra-Kālī and Durgā with eighteen, sixteen and ten hands respectively, into the texture of his translation. The story of the king and the merchant narrated in Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa has been further amplified with materials from Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa. Lastly, the birth stories of Mahiṣāsura, Sumbha and Niśumbha and Raktabīja have been supplemented by narrations from Vāmana Purāṇa (chaps. 19-20).

Rucinātha's translation is literal and simple.

(iv) The next translation of Mārkandeya Candī goes to the credit of one Ranganātha Cakravartī, who introduces himself as an inhabitant of Nīlācala, i.e. Kāmākhyā hill. He gives a long Ms. No. 8, Cooch-Behar State Library (Bengali Section).

 L. 38

genealogy of his family appended to his work from which it can be gathered that Siva Candra the ancestor of his family was a contemporary of Dharmapāla who reigned over Kāmarūpa in twelfth century. The date of his composition cannot be definitely ascertained but the language unmistakeably proves it to be of later origin. He makes a free translation of the Sanskrit texts with elucidation on certain incidents here and there. The description of the hermitage of Medhasa may be cited as an example of his elaboration.

There is one more Assamese version of the above episode by one Madhusūdana Miśra.

7. VAMANA PURANA

Introductory.—The extent Vāmana Purāņa according to scholars in the Upapurāṇa mentioned as such in Kūrma (1.1.9) and Garuḍa Purāṇa (1.227.19). The original Vāmana Purāṇa included in the list of mahāpurāṇas is perhaps lost. The text begins with an account of the incarnation of Viṣṇu as a dwarf whence it takes its name. A considerable part of the work is devoted to the descriptions of sacred places and to Saiva and Sākta legends.

Assamese Versions.—No attempt was made to translate this Purāṇa systematically. Some of its descriptions or accounts are seen to be utilised in supplementing the translations from other Purāṇas. For instance, Saṅkaradeva introduced a certain accounts of this purāṇa into the translation of the Book VIII of Bhāgavata Purāṇa, and in his Anādi-Pātana also cosmogonical accounts from this purāṇa are seen to be introduced. The only work which is supposed to be a regular translation from Vāmana Purāṇa is Hema Sarasvati's Prahlāda Caritra. Hema Sarasvatī flourished during the time of king Durlabhanārāyaṇa, who probably reigned towards the end of the fourteenth century. Hema Sarasvati in the colophon of his Prahlāda Caritra refers to himself and to his work in the following way:

Kamatā-purar Durlabhanārayaṇa
nṛpavara anupāma |
tāhāna rājyata Rudra-Sarasvatī
Devayānī kanyā nāma ||
tāhāna tanaya Hema-Sarasvatī
Dhruvara anuja bhāi | padabandhe teho pracāra karilā
Vāmana Purāṇa cāi ||

(In the kingdom of Durlabhanārāyaṇa the uncomparable king of Kamatāpura, lived one Rudra Sarasvatī, who had a daughter Devayānī and two sons, Dhruba and Hema Sarasvatī. The latter rendered into Assamese verses this episode of the Vāmana Purāṇa.)

But in the extant version of the Sanskrit Vāmana Purāṇa, the account of the Man-lion incarnation of Viṣṇu and the episode of Prahlāda's early life are absent. Adventures of Prahlāda in his mature life and accounts of his pilgrimage are only to be found, in the extant version. Hema Sarasvatī describes the early life of Prahlāda as tyrannized and oppressed by his own father and the subsequent death of Hiraṇyakaśipu in the encounter with the Man-lion incarnation of Viṣṇu. As the extant Sanskrit version of the Vāmana Purāṇa does not contain the above episode. Hema Sarasvatī must have derived his materials from the Vāmana Purāṇa of the mahāpurāṇa category which is irrecoverably lost.

Hema Sarasvati's Prahlāda Caritra is a simple narrative account, betraying archaic and early forms and expressions.

SKANDA PURĂŅA

Introductory.-Skanda Purana in the existing form is one of the most voluminous purănas. This purăna is named after Skanda, son of Siva and commander of the celestial army, who is said to have narrated it. At present Skanda Purana consists of seven Khandas with several sections within each Khanda. These seven Khandas are (1) Maheśvara, (2) Viṣṇu, (3) Brahmā, (4) Kāšī, (5) Avantya, (6) Nāgara and (7) Prabhāsa. Though this devision of Skanda Purāna is supported by Nārādīya Purāņa (1.104) its real division originally seems to have been into six Samhitās sub-divided into fifty Khandas. These Samhitās are (1) Sanat Kumārīya, (2) Sūta, (3) Brāhmī, (4) Vaisņāvī, (5) Śankari, (6) Sauri. The latter division is found even in the body of the texts. But all the Samhitas are not extant today, only some of them are available still. Skanda Purāna is predominantly a Saivite purana, though Vaisnavite and Sakta elements are not negligible. Another noticeable feature of this purana is the overwhelming mass of Māhātmyas of different holy places in India. The upper limit of the date of the present Skanda Purana has been fixed at 700 A.D.

Assumese Versions.—Skanda Purāņa is not a very popular purāņa in Assam. So far only two fragmentary translations are known to have been done. One is a translation of Utkala khaṇḍa, or Puruṣottama Kṣetra-māhātmyas belonging to Viṣṇu Khaṇḍa, and the other is a translation of the Brahma Gītā, a part of Sūta-Saṃhitā.

(i) Purusottama Kṣetra (Purī) is held by Assamese Vaiṣnavites as the holiest of holy places. Sankaradeva himself composed Oreṣa-Varṇana, from Brahma Purāṇa describing the origin of the Kṣetra. Utkala-Khaṇḍa also deals with the same topic. It gives an account how Indradyumna, the king of Avanti, at the bidding of the creator and with the help of Viśvakarmā carved out from a piece of sacred log, the images of Jagannātha, Balarāma and Subhadrā and finally installed them with due ceremonies. The original Sanskrit Utkala Khaṇḍa, in addition to the legend of the origin of Purusottama Kṣetra and its sacred images, describes various māhātmyas connected with that sacred place and ceremonies and rites to be observed on various occasions. The Assamese version has not dealt with these in detail, but greater stress is laid on the stories and legends.

The translation was done in the year 1667 A.D. by one Candracūda Aditya. The language of the work is slightly different from the language used by contemporary Assamese poets. A few Bengali forms are discernible, here and there, in his work.

(ii) Brahma Gītā by Ratnākara Miśra is a translation of the topic of the same name belonging to the second part of Śūta Samhita of Skanda Purāṇa. Like Bhagavat Gītā it is also narrated by Kṛṣṇa to Arjuna. Brahma has been described here as the ultimate reality. But unlike Brahma-Gītā of the original Sanskrit version which has a Saivite leaning, the Assamese version leans towards Vaiṣṇavism.

BŖHANNĀRADĪYA PURĀŅA

There are two purāṇas bearing the same title, Bṛhannāradīya and Nāradīya respectively. The former is called Bṛhat (great) in order to distinguish it from Nāradīya, an upapurāṇa. But though traditionally Bṛhannāradīya is included in the list of mahapurāṇas, it does not deserve to be counted among the major-purāṇas being purely a sectarian work lacking all the characteristics of a mahāpurāṇa. Sūta Ugrasīavā narrates here the conversation between Nārada and Sanat Kumāra, regardīng Viṣṇu-bhakti. Nārada appears here as the founder of Viṣṇu-bhakti. It describes the Vaiṣṇava feasts and ceremonies, illustrated by various legends and contains chapters on the glorification of the Ganges, the duties of castes and Aśramas, the funeral rites and ceremonies, and so forth. Devotion to Viṣṇu is declared repeatedly to be the only way of salvation. It was probably written near about the 9th century A.D.

Assamese Version.—The entire Bṛhannāradīya Purāṇa was translated into Assamese by one Bhuvaneśvara Vācaspati Miśra.²⁵ The poet though an inhabitant of the Brahmaputra valley composed his work under the patronage of a Kachāri queen Candraprabhā whose husband Tāmradhvaja ruled in Khāspur (1706-1708 A.D.). The poet refers to his patron in the following lines:

Tāmradhvaja mahāraja chilā mahābhāga |
Sarvaloka sadā kare yāra anurāga ||
tāna putra rājā Suradarpa mahāśaya |
Candraprabhā nāme devī tāna mātā haya ||
Kavi Vācaspati tāna vākya anusāra |
Nārādīya kathāmṛta racilā payāra ||

(There was a great king Tamradhvaja, loved by all persons. He has a noble son, king Suradarpanārāyaṇa whose mother's name is Candraprabhā. The poet Vācaspati, under her orders, has composed Nāradīya Kathāmṛta into Assamese verses).

Though the poet has called it Nāradī-Purāṇa, it is really a translation of Bṛhannāradīya Purāṇa consisting of forty chapters. Nāradīya Purāṇa though it treats almost the same topics, contains one hundred and twenty-five chapters. The details of the Assamese version tallies with that of Bṛhannāradīya Purāṇa, and not with that of Nāradīya Purāṇa.

As the work was composed far away from the centre of Assamese language and culture its diction bears slight traces of local speech.

The work was concluded during the reign of Suradarpanārāyaṇa, who ruled at Khāspur from 1708-1721 A.D. It should be remembered in this connection that Tāmradhvaja, the father of Suradarpanārāyaṇa was installed on the Kachari throne by the Ahom monarch Rudrasinha, and during that period there was bound to be frequent intercourse between these two kingdoms.

Bhūvaneśvara Vācaspati Miśra might have gone there during this period of Ahom-Kachāri relationship.

10. DHARMA PURĂNA

There are two puranas bearing the same title Dharma Purana, of which one is called Brhat-Dharma Purana or The Great Purana of the Duties. Both of them are upapuranas. In the list of the enumeration of upapurāṇas, to be found in Brhat-Dharma-purāṇa (1.25.19-26), both these puranas, i.e., Dharma Purana and Brhaddharma Purana are mentioned. Therefore it is erroneous to consider them as identical. Of course the same topics are considered in both the works. As the very name suggests Dharma Purāņa primarily describes the various duties of a man and the merits and demerits, accruing from the observance of non-observance of those duties. The duties towards parents, preceptors, Brahmanas, etc, the duties to be performed by wives and widows, the merits of performing Sraddhas and tarpanas, the virtues of taking ceremonial baths, and of observing different Vratas, the glorification of the Tulasi plant and of Rudrākṣa beads and such other duties, observances, ceremonies are narrated in the puranas with appropriate legends and stories.

Assamese Versions: There are two Assamese versions of the Dharma Purāna. The first one was composed by Kavicandra Dvija in 1735 A.D. (1657 Saka era) under the joint inspiration of Siva Simha, Ambikā and Ugrasimha, of the Ahom royal dynasty. The following prefactory lines of the poet deserve to be quoted here:

pandita buddhita śrestha tāhāna tanaya jyeştha Siva-Simha nāme mahīpati

Samāna nohave yāra gunavanta madhye sāra lāvanya rūpata Ratipati sainya pada samsparsata yāra yātrā samayata bhumita utthita renucaya

Bhāskaraka lāga pāi gagana langhiā yāi dhākia ratrīka dekhānaya ||

sāksāte Ratira thāna hhaileka mahisi tana svāmīra ballabhā Sānti āti

Cetiyā vamsata jāta Ambikā nāmata khyāta svāmīra sevāta yāra rati ||

tāhāna tanaya bhailā Ugra-Siṃha nāma thailā Paṇḍitasakale śāstra cāi |

Tipāma deśara pati śiśukāle dhīramati dekhi save ānandaka pāi ||

hena Śiva-Simharāi ugrasimha śiśukāyi Ambikā jananī 'Jagamāo |

tinio janara vāṇī śirogata kari māni Badha nāme śobhana svabhāvo ||

rājāra sevaka bar pada Dharma Purāṇara Karāi likhāilanta manohara |

Sapta vāṇa rasa candra śaka vatsarata grantha
Samāpata bhailā rucikara ||

(His (Rudrasimha's) eldest son king Sivasimha is learned and intelligent. No body is equal to him in virtue and he is as beautiful as the husband of Rati. Dust raised by his marching soldiers envelopes the sun and makes the latter invisible, and then the days appear like nights. Born of the Cetia family, devoted to her husband, resembling Rati in beauty and beloved of her husband is his queen Ambikā by name. They have a son, whom the scholars, consulting scriptures, named as Ugrasimha. Though placed in charge of the Tipāma region even at his boyhood, everybody is pleased with his sober and dignified mien. Badha, an officer of unblemished character, respectfully carried out the joint orders of such a king Sivasimha, young prince Ugrasimha, and of queen Ambikā by having caused this Dharma Purāna to be translated into Assamese verses in the year 1657 of the Saka era).

The Ahom royal families newly converted into the Hinduism took keen interest in the propagation and popularization of the Hindu religious ideas and beliefs. The translation of Dharma Purāṇa might be due to this religious zeal of the royal patrons. It is a voluminous work replete with didactic and moral stories, some of which such as the origin of the Ganges, the fight between Andhakāsura and Siva, the quarrel of Kadru and Vinatā, the stealing of nectar by Garuḍa, etc., are to be found in many other purāṇas also. There is an interesting reference to the distribution of non-Aryan tribes in and around Assam. Garuḍa the king of birds, devoured through mistake a Brāhmaṇa along with some Mlecchas. But unable to digest him he had to vomit them all out, in course of his flight through various regions of Assam:

sambudhiā vacana bulilā Garudaka sattvare bajhāyo bāpa ito brāhmaņaka || _ bājha kariyoka ehi candālaganaka Lauhityaka madhya kari cario diśaka || aranyara madhye keho parvatara majha diśe diśe karā ito mleccagana bājha pitrra ājñāka dhari śirogata kari jhänte bājh karileka thāi thāi kari advāpio prithivīta isavaka dekhi | śuniyoka sisavara nāma kaho lekhi || Guñja name ache yito purva pradesata nāhi dādhi gumpha tāra keśa sulalita || agni pradešata Nagna āchaya yateka birala birala keśa dekhiya pratyeka | ... daksinata Kachāri Kuvāca buli yāka go māmsa bhunje punu prānira himsaka nairta diśata Garo adi samudai gomansa nabhaile tära dineka nayāī || Vipraka badhite tāra kicu śamkā nāi paścimata Kharppara buliya loke kay papa hena buli sito najane janmata dekhile matrake yaka buddhi have hata väyavya diśata āche Turuka yavana go-māmsa bhunjiā dine santoșita mana 📗 aśvata cadiya phure yuddhaka bicāri dekhi bhayānkara badhāi āche gopha dādi uttara diśata Bhota adi mlecchagana parvate thākiā kare samaste bhakṣana aiśanyata āche Miri, Mallaka niścai |

(Addressing Garuḍa he spoke: "Please immediately vomit out this Brahmāṇa and also these Cāndālas along the surrounding regions of the river Lauhitya and in the hills and deep forests of the different directions." Accordingly Garuḍa immediately vomitted out all the Mlecchas in previous places, who could be seen even to-day in this world. I am enumerating them, please listen in the eastern region the Guñjas, with beautiful hair but without beards and moustaches, inhabit. In the south-east, reside the Nagnas with scanty hair. In the south, the Kachāris and Kuvācas live. They take beef and do violence to all kinds of creatures. In the southwestern region the Gāros live, not a single day they spend without beef, and they do not feel any scruple to kill even a Brāhmaṇa. In the west the Kharpparas reside. They do not know what is a sin, their very appearance makes one shudder. In the north-western direction the dreadful Turukas with long beard and war-like appearance riding on horses move in pursuit of war. Beef is their favourite meal. In the north the Bhots and Akās live on mountains and eat anything and everything. The Miris and Mallakas inhabit in the north-east).

There are one or two more local references which certainly do not form parts of the original Sanskrit version. There is little that can be truly called literary or poetical in his work.

(ii) The second version is a later production. It is a work of Paraśurāma Dvija, the translator of Viṣṇu-Purāṇa.

11. KALKI-PURĀNA

The deeds of Visnu in the future age at the close of the Kali-Yuga are described in Kalki Purāṇa. The Assamese version begins with a description of the people of the Kali-Yuga illustrating their propensity towards evil doings. Viṣṇu having been informed of this by the creator, promises to take his birth towards the close of the Kali-Yuga in the house of a Brāhmaṇa to redeem the world by purging out the evils from the surface of the earth. Riding on a snow-white pony, he will destroy the Mlecchas (heretics) and will inaugurate a new world of peace and happiness based on virtue and truth.

This purana was translated in the nineteenth century by Ghanasyama Khargharia Phukan (1795-1880). He was an officer of some distinction during the reign of the last Ahom monarch and in the early part of the British administration he served the latter in various capacities.

12. PURAŅIC TRANSLATIONS OF DOUBTFUL ORIGIN

Besides the genuine translations discussed in the preceding sections, there are in Assamese a few works of various dimensions which claim relationship with some Sanskrit puranas, real or fic-

The manuscript copy of the Assamese version is profusely illustrated with coloured paintings, preserved in the Library of Kamrup Anusandhana Samiti.

306

titious. Thus the voluminous work Vyāsāśrama, alleged to be written by Rāma Sarasvatī claims as its sources the various purānas and Samhitas. The work mainly depicts various exploits of Bhīsma of Mahabharata fame. Those exploits are neither to be found in the great epic, nor in any of the known puranas. Kurmavali-Badha by Sāgarkharī Daivajña refers as its source to Kumuda Purāņa hitherto unknown. There is a small kāvya in Assamese entitled Kālikā Purāņa describing the marriage between Mahādeva and Pārvatī. It is full of secular touches, and reflects Assamese social life and habits. The skeleton of the episode might be derived from the Sanskrit Kalikā Purāna, but its treatment has nothing to do with the Sanskrit texts. Another small kavya titled as Agni-Purana was written by Prince Madhunārāyana, son of king Raghudeva of the eastern Koc kingdom. It describes how a living man made havoc in the land of Yamaraja. Though it has been titled as Agni-Purana, the Sanskrit purana does not contain that story. are a few more minor works claiming relationship with some untraced and unfamiliar puranas. It is doubtful whether those purānas did ever exist.27

In conclusion, it would not be out of place here to refer to three versions of Padmā-Purāna, a vernacular purāna which deals with the glorification and exploits of the snake-goddess Manasā. Though written in the provincial language, Padmā-Purāņa has many similarities with Sanskrit puranas. The snake-goddess Manasa was received into the Hindu pantheon at a time when the N.I.A. languages had replaced Sanskrit as the literary medium and the practice of writing puranas in Sanskrit practically went out of vogue. But in spite of the fact that it is written in the local language, Padmā-Purāņa is regarded by the people as any other purana and its popularity is immense. These three versions of Padmā-Purāna were written by Mankara, Durgābara, and Sukavi Narayanadeva between the fourteenth and the seventeenth century of the Christian era.

^{27.} In the Catalogue of Assamese books and manuscripts compiled by Kanaklal Barua and Ramakanta Barkakati in 1895 A.D. under the auspices of the Assamese Students' Literary Club, Calcutta, manuscript copies of a few more puranas are mentioned. But those have not yet come to light,

ASSAMESE VERSIONS OF THE GITAGOVINDA

BY

S. N. SARMA

I

The exquisitely lyrical Kāvya Gītagovinda of Jayadeva occupies an exalted place in the history of Sanskrit literature. Jayadeva is said to have flourished during the reign of the last Sena king Lakṣmaṇasena of Gauḍa in the later part of the twelfth century of the Christian era. In a verse occurring in the work itself, we are informed that he was the son of Bhojadeva and Ramādevī and the name of his wife was probably Padmādevī. He was born at a place known as Kenduvilva, modern Kenduli in the district of Birbhum.

The fame of Gitagovinda has never been confined to the province of its origin. It has innumerable commentaries all over India and more than a dozen imitations. Not to speak of other provinces, in Assam alone, there are three Sanskrit commentaries and three Assamese versions written between the sixteenth and the eighteenth centuries of the Christian era. The source of its so much popularity lies in the elegance, clarity and music of its diction, as well as in the felicity and richness of its sentiments. It has for its theme the divine love of Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa, so popular in medieval India, depicted in a humanised form. The following appreciation of the work by an eminent scholar of Sanskrit literature deserves to be quoted here to give an idea of its poetical merit.

"The literary form in which it is presented is extremely original. The work calls itself a Kāvya and conforms to the formal division into cantos, but in reality it goes much beyond the stereotyped Kāvya prescribed by the rhetoricians, and modern critics have found in it a lyric drama (Lassen), a pastoral (Jones), an opera (Levi) and melodrama (Pischel) and a refined Yātrā (Schroeder). As a creative work it has a form of its own, but it defies conventional classification. Though cast in a semi-dramatic mould, the spirit is entirely lyrical; though modelled perhaps on the prototype of the popular Kṛṣṇa-Yātrā in its choral and melodramatic peculiarities, yet it is far removed from the old Yātrās by its want of improvisation and mimetic qualities; though imbued with religious feeling, the attitude is extremely secular; though intended and still used for popular festival where simplicity and directness count, yet it possesses all the distinctive characteristics of a deliberate work of art."1

The popularity of the Kavya does not entirely depend on its poetical merit, however high it might be. Its popularity may be ascribed to a considerable extent to its affinity with the subsequent vernacular poetry. It does not strictly follow the Sanskrit tradition, but bears closer resemblance to the spirit and style of Apabhramsa or vernacular poetry. The musical padavalis really conform to the vernacular manner of expression and employ rhymed moric metres. Scholars therefore consider Jayadeva's work as the precursor of "Mangala-lyrics" of the later period.2 Though some have tried to show that Gitagovinda with its crotic Rādhā-motif could not impress the Vaisnavas of Assam, the fact that it was translated in spite of the existence of the Rādhā-motif by a devout Vaisnava like Rāma Sarasvatī, with certain modifications, speaks eloquently of its popularity. Of the three commentators, one Ratna Kandali, is definitely known to be a follower of Śańkaradeva. Even in one song of Keligopala-Nāţa of Śańkaradeva, an echo of Jayadeva's song "Candanacarcchita nīla kalevara" is audible. His Daśāvatāra-Stotra is also very popular amongst all sects of Assamese people. In the following pages translations of Gitagovinda have been discussed.

The number of manuscript commentaries and versions show the great popularity of Gitagovinda in Assam. The first of the three versions was composed by Rāma Sarasvatī the renowned translator of the Mahābhārata. That Gitagovinda is a later composition of the poet can be ascertained from the following lines of the version itself:

> pūrvata racilo pada āti anupāma Udyogara ādyakathā bhāgavata nāma Bhīşmaparva nibandhilo Bhīşmara niryāna pāce Ghosa-yātrā vanaparva yāra nāma

(Before this, I composed the first part of Udyoga-Parva containing Hari's name; and then I composed Bhisma-Parva, after which I composed Ghoşa-yatra, named as Vana-Parva).

^{1.} History of Bengal (Dacca University), p. 370.

^{2.} S. K. Sen: 'Mangala lyrics', G. U. Journal, Vol. II.

The poet's reference in his version to the patron king Dharmanārāyaṇa (1613- 1629 A.D.) points to the approximate date of the composition of the version. It should be noted in this connection that Rāma Sarasvatī passed the latter part of his life in the court of Dharmanārāyaṇa. He introduces himself in his version of Gītagovinda as the priest and preceptor of Dharmanārāyaṇa.³ So the date of composition of his Gītagovinda can safely be placed in the first quarter of the 17th century.

Rāma Sarasvatī's Gītagovinda is not exactly a literal translation of Jayadeva's kāvya. His version is an admixture of Bhāgavata Purāṇa and Gītagovinda of Jayadeva. Jayadeva's kāvya is not at all based upon Bhāgavata Purāṇa, rather it has got certain fundamental similarities with Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa with its Rādhā legend and exuberant development of the erotic sentiment. But the Assamese poet in order to make his Kāvya fit in well with the Vaiṣṇavism of Assam where Bhāgavata Purāṇa holds a supreme position, blends the Rāsa-krīḍā incident of the above Purāṇa with Jayadeva's description. The poet himself admits this in the introductory lines of his version. In the chapters 29th to 33rd of the 10th Canto of Bhāgavata Purāṇa the Rāsa-krīḍā of Śrī-Kṛṣṇa is described. To show to what extent the story of Bhāgavata Purāṇa has been introduced in the Assamese version a summary of the latter is given below:

Having heard the melodious note of the flute of Krsna in an autumnal moonlit night all the Gopīs including Rādhā left their home at dead of night for Vrndavana. Krsna with a view to test their sincerity of love and devotion for him, at first questioned them about their errands and asked them to return home reminding them of the duties of virtuous ladies. But subsequently, having ascertained the firmness and sincerity of their love, he fulfilled their desire by performing Rāsa-krīdā with them. Kṛṣṇa by his magical power transformed the autumnal nature of Vrndavana to a luxuriant vernal state. Thus while Rāsa-krīdā was in progress Rādhā who desired Kṛṣṇa exclusively for herself, went away with two of her confidents with wounded sentiment. In the meantime Kṛṣṇa came to know of it and began to feel and pine for her. Then follows a long and detailed description of the pangs of their separation conveyed to each other through Ratnavali and Sukanthi, the two confidents of Rādhā. At long last they were united; but hardly had they realised the joy of the reunion, when the other Gopis in quest of Kṛṣṇa scented their whereabouts. Kṛṣṇa feigning like an ordinary paramour fled to the deep forest with Rādhā. This time Rādhā's pride got the upper hand and thinking herself the favourite mistress of Kṛṣṇa began to treat him with scant respect. As a result Kṛṣṇa disappeared, forsaking her in a bewildered state when the other Gopis in quest of Kṛṣṇa found her alone. Finding no clue of Kṛṣṇa they returned to the bank of the Yamunā and in an ecstasy of love for him began to imitate his actions and thereby tried to seek consolation. Kṛṣṇa realising their distress and their profound love for him appeared again.

^{3.} Gitagovinda, p. 6 (K. R. Barua edition; 1290 Bengali era).

The above story of the Assamese version is exactly similar to the incident narrated in Bhagavata Purana. Bhagavata Purana speaks of autumnal and not vernal Rāsa-krīdā as described by Jayadeva. Rāma Sarasvatī seeks to bridge this difference by taking resort to Kṛṣṇa's wonderful magical power by which he engrafted vernal beauty over the autumnal nature. In Bhagavata Purana the name of Radha does not occur at all, but mention is made of a certain Gopī with whom Kṛṣṇa disappeared from the midst of other Gopīs. Rāma Sarasvatī has assigned to this favourite Gopī the role of the Rādhā of Jayadeva. The two confidants of Rādhā acting as go-between have been named as Ratnāvalī and Sukanthī in the Assamese version. These two names also are not to be found in Jayadeva. From this account it is evident that Rāma Sarasvatī interwove the description of Jayadeva's Gitagovinda into the texture of Bhagavata, with additional borders of Vaisnavite touches wherever necessary. The cause of introducing the Bhagavata element is not far to seek. Assamese Vaisnavism is conspicuous by the supreme position of Bhagavata Purana and the absence of the Radha legend with its amorous motif. So whenever the Assamese poets had to introduce Rādhā they did it with certain modifications. As a result here also the character of Rādhā loses much of its prominence as found in the original Kāvva of Javadeva. But in this attempt to change the colour of Rādhā's character, Rāma Sarasvatī has not been able to change her altogether; in many places her character as described in Gitagovinda or in Brahmavaivarta Purana remains intact. For instance, in Brahmavaivarta Purāna Rādhā and Krsna are described as embodiments of Prakrti and Purusa and it is implicit in Gitagovinda also. The Assamese poet also states categorically in more than one place that Rādhā and Krsna are nothing but embodiments of Prakrti, Iśvari, Vidya, Bhagavati in different places.

311

One of the noticeable features of Rāma Sarasvatī's version is the detailed description of Rāgas and Rāgiņīs employed by Jayadeva. Jayadeva's Kāvya consists of twelve cantos divided into twentyfour songs. Rāma Sarasvatī while translating the songs into Assamese payārs and tripadis has not kept the division of Jayadeva intact. He has incorporated within each chapter two or more songs of Jayadeva. Along with the translations of the songs he describes the general characteristics of the Rāga employed in each song. These Rāga-lakṣanas are taken from musical treatises in Sanskrit. As specimens, the following descriptions of Vasanta and Karnāta Rāgas placed side by side with the Assamese versions may be useful for better appreciation:

(I) Sanskrit (Vasanta-Rāga):

śikhandi-barhocchaya-baddha-cūdah puṣṇan pikam cūtalatānkureṇa | bhraman mudā vāmamanojñamūrtir-matangamatta sa Vasanta Rāga ||

Assamese (Vasanta Rāga):

Vasanta rāgar śunā imata lakṣaṇa |
pramatta puruṣa goṭa dekhite śobhana |
mayūrara pucche cūḍā bāndhi manohara |
paridhāna bastra bṛkṣa pallava patrara ||
sundara subeśa mūrti gati manorama |
esava lakṣaṇe rāga vasanta uttama ||

(V. 59-60)

(II) Sanskrit (Karņāţa Rāga):

kṛpāṇa-pāṇi gaja-danta-patramekam bahan dakṣiṇa-karṇa pure ||

samstuyamānah suracāranoghaih karņāţarāga sikhikanthanīlah ||

Assamese (Karnāţa)

nīlabarņa puruşara mandirā hātata |
cāri hastīdanta įvale dakhiņa karņata ||
stuti kare devatā asura gaņe mili |
isava lakṣaṇe karnāṭa rāga buli ||

(V. 151)

I have not given the English translation of the pieces as the Sanskrit versions are simple enough to bring out the meaning. In some cases, as in that of Gandhara and Malava, the poet in addition to those Rāgās, describes their families including Rāgiņīs and indicates the appropriate tune and time for singing those Ragas and Rāginīs.

In Jayadeva the erotic possibilities of the Rādhā-Kṛṣṇa legend have been elaborately worked out; and the Bengali poet presents Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa in a vivid background of great sensuous charm. In the Assamese version of Rāma Sarasvatī this erotic emphasis has not all been minimised although here and there Vaisnavite leanings are obvious. The hero (Kṛṣṇa) and the heroine (Rādhā) are described with elaborate technical details that are to be found in Sanskrit treatises on poetics and erotics. In describing the different stages of the erotic theme towards its conclusion the Assamese poet on many occasions makes an addition to Jayadeva's erotic description. Some of these additions are his own, and others are mainly culled from Sanskrit sources. Thus while describing the places where the lovers should meet the poet gives the following description which is approximately a vernacular rendering of similar lines of Viśvanātha's Sāhityadarpana (Chap. III):

> ksetram bātī bhagna devālayo dūti grham vanam | mālayanca śmaśānanca nadyādīnām tatī tathā || evam krtabhisaranam pumécalinam vinodane sthananyaştau tatha dhvantacchanne kutracidasraye

Gitagovinda (Rāma Sarasvatī):

ātha thāi krīdā kare kāminī samasta śuniyoka tahara nirnaya yata yata khetra bhūmi bārī aru bhagṇa geha niriana ghara āru aranya bišesa || nija sthane nadi tire jalata namai | vesyā gaņe krīdibāka ehi ātha thāi ||

(V. 108-109)

Similarly while describing the mental afflictions of Radha in her separation, the poet incidentally narrates the conditions of women in pangs of separation. This description being absent in Jayadeva bears close resemblance to the following lines of Natua Šāstra:

> Devatānamalam-kuryāt dadyāt-valibhuje valim | likhet kanta prati-kritim pathayet suka sarikah ||

ganayeccābadhi dinam gītam gayettadamkitam | evamcidhabinoden nayet kāla biyoginī ||

Gițagovinda (Râma Sarasvati):

birahinī kanyā save birahara thāne |
citra karma kari tebe patiyāve mane ||
kato birahinīye devaka pūjā kari |
kato gīta gavanta svāmīka mane dhari ||
śuka sārī parhavanta pālatāve mane |
ehi mate kāla bañce birahinī jane ||

(V. 183-184)

313

In certain places the Assamese poet has supplemented the description of Jayadeva with a view to give a complete picture. Thus he has rendered into Assamese not only the vernal beauties of nature depicted by Jayadeva but has also supplemented it by introducing an additional description showing the influence of the vernal season upon the animate and inanimate things of the world. In certain places description from Bhāgavata has also been translated.

It is clear from the above account that Rāma Sarasvatī's rendering of Gitagovinda cannot be called a literal and faithful one. He has inserted the beautiful erotic description of Jayadeva without following the order of his plot. But it should be remembered also that Rāma Sarasvatī being a devout Vaiṣṇava has not lost sight of his Vaiṣṇavite ideals. Without affecting the poetical beauty he has laid stress upon the Vaiṣṇavite ideals wherever possible.

III

After the disintegration of the Koc kingdom the centre of literary activity shifted from Koc Behär to the capital of the Ähom kingdom at Sibsagar. With the change of literary centre the traditional ideal of literature also underwent a certain change. The literary outlook of the Ähom court was to a certain extent secular. Literature predominantly of an erotic type such as Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa, Gītagovinda, Śakuntalā found favour with the court poets. The Rādhā-Kṛṣṇa story entered into the lyrics supposed to be composed by Rudra Siṃha and Śiva Siṃha, some of which were written in Sanskrit in imitation of Jayadeva's verses. Under the patronage of king Rudra Siṃha (1696-1714 A.D.) Rāmanārāyaṇa Cakravartī, better known as Kavirāja Cakravartī, translated Gītagôvinda into Assamese verse. Kavirāja Cakravartī, introduces himself in certain places of his work as Dvijabara. Under the royal patronage of Rudra Simha and his son Siva Simha, Kavirāja Cakravartī composed Gītagovinda, Kṛṣṇa-janma Khaṇḍa Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa, Samkhacūḍabadha-kāvya and Śakuntalā.

Unlike the version of Rāma Sarasvatī, this version closely follows the original of Jayadeva. This version no doubt lacks the original flavour of Rāma Sarasvatī's version, but it is more faithful to the original. As usual, Kavirāja Cakravartī has translated the original songs and narratives in the payara or pada metre of Assamese, without adhering strictly to the original division into cantos and songs; but he has demarcated the several songs by appropriate reference to the initial lines of each song. But the noticeable feature of the manuscript preserved in the Kamarupa Anusandhana Samiti, Gauhati, is that it is profusely illustrated, so much so that there is not a single folio left unillustrated. Similar paintings of the scenes depicted in Gitagovinda are also seen in South Rajasthan and Gujarata. The painter's name in the manuscript is not mentioned. Samkhacudabadha Kāvya, by the same poet is similarly illustrated. It may be presumed therefore that the poet himself supplied the illustrations. There are a few illustrations depicting the court of King Rudra Simha. The paintings are not so brilliant and natural as those of Hastīvidyārņava where the influence of Mughal painting is clearly discernible. The painter whoever he might have been portrays the Ragas in approximate conformity with the classical precepts. There is a vignette of Jayadeva at one corner of each folio-painting; the poet as it were, watching scenes of his imagination.

So far as the language and description of Kavirāja Cakravartī are concerned, they lack the flavour of Rāma Sarasvatī's independent outlook, but are more faithful to the original. It is impossible to retain the elegance, music and assonance of the original version in a translation, but it cannot be denied that the Assamese poet has been to a great extent successful in maintaining the spirit of the Sanskrit texts. This has been possible because of the retention of words used by Jayadeva, as far as possible.

The third version was composed by one Dharmadeva Bhatta in the year 1796 A.D. He introduces himself as the grandson of one Gopāla Bhatta (Gopālabhattātmaja-tanaya) in the concluding colophon of the work. The influence of Rāma Sarasvati's version on his translation is apparent, not only in the language and description but in contents too. The introduction of Rāsa-Krīdā episode from Bhāgavata is also a marked feature of the work and descriptive feature of Rāgas employed in the original Sanskrit text, bear close resemblance to those of Rāma Sarasvatī's version. But too much insistence on Vaiṣṇavite ideals and frequent harpings on didactive elements have reduced the literary flavour of the work. That the translator also kept before him the Sanskrit version, is evident from the original lines quoted in the beginning of every chapter and the presence of descriptive passages which could be traced back in the original version of Jayadeva only.

This version incorporates the traditional life-story of Jayadeva, according to which the great poet due to the influence of inexorable fate committed rape on his mother and killed a Brāhmaṇa and a cow in a drunken fit. Life became unbearable for him when he realised all these after the intoxication was over. To expiate the sins thus committed he went to the temple of Lord Jagannātha but was repelled by the keepers. He therefore repaired to the back of the temple and began to sing the glories of the Lord in a most heart-rending tune. Ultimately the Lord took pity on him and the entire temple with the Lord within is said to have turned back to listen. Being favoured by the Lord, he came back and became the court poet of king Lakṣmaṇa Sena of Gauḍa.

CENTRAL ARCHAEOLOGICAL LIBRARY NEW DELHI . Issue Record. Catalogue No.891.44109/Kak.-1995. Author-Kakati, Banikanta. Title—Aspects of early Assemese literature. Borrower No. Date of Issue Date of Return P.T.O.